1. The provision of the Mutual Defence Assistance Act which, as interpreted in the light of the course of the legislation through Congress, is held to require a foreign government placing orders for military equipment in the United States to deposit with the United States Government the full estimated cost of the equipment in advance of placing the order is in direct conflict with The Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, the basic law of Canada governing the financial administration of the Government and parliamentary control of governmental expenditures. Section 30 of this Act reads as follows:

> "No payment authorized by Parliament shall be made in respect of work performed or material supplied whether under contract or not, in connection with any part of any public service of Canada, unless, in addition to any other voucher or certificate which is required in that behalf, the deputy head or other officer charged with the administration of the particular service, certifies that such work has been performed, or such materials supplied, as the case may be, and that the price charged is according to contract, or if not covered by contract, is fair and just."

To meet the urgent requirements of a particular contract which had been arranged several months ago (a $11.5 million contract for the purchase of certain aircraft components in the United States), we suggested that as an exceptional measure to avoid delay in securing the execution of this urgent order Canada would be prepared to arrange with a United States bank for an irrevocable letter of credit in favour of the United States Government for the estimated cost of the contract, to be drawn down from time to time as work was completed or as deliveries were made in accordance with the terms of the contract. We felt that by the use of such letter of credit, we would be meeting the literal terms of the National Defence Assistance Act, i.e., at the time of placing the order we would through the letter of credit be "making available" to the United States Government the full estimated cost of the order. We also felt that by providing such a letter of credit on an irrevocable basis, we would be meeting fully the purpose which we understood Congress had in mind in drafting the financial provisions of the M.D.A.A., namely, the desire to safeguard against an irresponsible or financially weak foreign government getting the United States authorities to place an order for defence equipment on its behalf and later cancelling the order after part of the expenditure had been incurred, or claiming financial inability to pay after the order had been completed. Under our proposal this danger would be avoided, because no government which was financially weak or irresponsible would be able to arrange an irrevocable letter of credit with a United States bank (unless of course adequate security was deposited with the bank).

3. After extended discussion, the detailed arrangements respecting this letter of credit and its application to the particular order for aircraft components have been worked out and agreed to by both parties. The procedure which it has been necessary for Canada to agree to in regard to drawing down the credit and accounting for payments may be outlined as follows:

(a) The United States bank with which we have arranged to establish the credit has had to be authorized by Canada to pay to the Treasurer of the United States from time to time the amounts requested to be so paid by the United States Secretary of State or his designate. The payments must, so to speak, be automatic; they cannot be dependent upon any certificate from a Canadian administrative official that work has been performed or equipment delivered or upon any prior approval of the Canadian Comptroller of the Treasury.

(b) It may be possible for the Canadian authorities to consider every such payment as an accountable advance, which must be made each month in sufficient time in advance to permit of processing through the United States Government procedure in time to meet the payments which the United States Defence Department will be required to make on contracts placed for Canadian account or deliveries made from Government sources. (In the Canadian Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act no specific authority is given to make accountable advances but there is an implication in Section 32(2) that such accountable advances may be made provided they are brought to account within a short time after the close of the fiscal year. Section 32(2) reads as follows:

> "Accountable advances to any person for any purpose, which remain unaccounted for at the termination of the fiscal year, shall be repaid or accounted for within fifteen days thereafter. The Treasury Board, having regard to the special circumstances of any particular case, may, on the recommendation of the Comptroller, set a later date for such settlement, but in no case shall such later date be beyond sixty days after the termination of the fiscal year.")

The difficulty here is that it can be strongly argued that Section 32(2) is meant to relate only to personal advances for travel and the like and not to cover advances for business transportation.

(c) There will be no accounting for the payments so made through submission to Canada of original vouchers, but Canada will be supplied each month in arrears with a certified statement of the disbursements made on the Canadian contracts and deliveries.

(d) While the original documents to support these payments will later be available in the St. Louis office of the United States Defence Department for inspection by a Canadian Treasury representative, and possible reconciliation with the contracts, these original documents will not be turned over to Canada in support of the payments.

(e) While Canada hopes to be able to effect a reconciliation and thereby determine the necessary accounting adjustment to be made in the Canadian accounts before the close of the accounts for the fiscal year, as required by Section 32 of our Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, the only bona fide documents that can be relied on as full and complete accounting will be the certified inspection and receipt vouchers which will be submitted only after the equipment is delivered in Canada.

4. The foregoing procedure means that Canada must permit the United States State and Defence Departments to perform the certifying functions reserved by Canadian law to the appropriate administrative officer of Canada (in this case, the Deputy Minister of National Defence), and the payment functions (involved in the withdrawals under the letter of credit and subsequent disbursements of funds to contractors) which by Canadian law are reserved to the Comptroller of the Treasury. Section 27(1) of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act reads as follows:

> "All issues of public moneys out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund shall be made under the direction and control of the Comptroller by cheque, or other instrument as the Treasury Board may from time to time direct, but no such issue shall be made in excess of any appropriation authorized by Parliament."

The extent to which the arrangement departs from Canadian law is apparent. It seems possible to rationalize it only on the assumption that in effect the United States State and Defence Departments are acting as agents of the Canadian Deputy Minister of National Defence and the Canadian Comptroller of the Treasury. It is hoped that we may be able to justify this exceptional procedure in this particular case as an emergency measure but it is obvious that it could not be justified as a permanent procedure. Statement ends.

Report by Deputy Minister of National Defence

TALKS WITH OFFICIALS OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENCE AND THE STATE DEPARTMENT IN WASHINGTON ON PROBLEMS OF CANADA-U.S. PROCUREMENT OF MILITARY SUPPLIES AND EQUIPMENT

On Thursday, 16th March, Mr. Drury had talks with Mr. Stephen T. Early, Deputy Secretary of Defence; Mr. Marx Leva, Assistant Secretary of Defence in charge of legal and legislative affairs; Mr. Hubert E. Howard, Chairman of the Munitions Board, and Brigadier General E.C. Langmead, Director of Military Programmes, Munitions Board. Mr. N.E. Halaby, Director of the Office of Foreign Military Affairs; Major General L.L. Lemnitzer, Director of the Office of Military Assistance; Mr. Francis T. Greene, Legal Counsel to the Director of the Office of Military Assistance, and Major General Patrick Timberlake, Chief of Staff, Munitions Board, were also present. On Friday, 17th March, Mr. Drury had a talk with Mr. John H. Ohly, Deputy Director of Mutual Defence Assistance at the State Department. Mr. William P. Snow, Officer-in-Charge of Dominion Affairs, was also present. Mr. George Ignatieff, of the Canadian Embassy, accompanied Mr. Drury to all the interviews. Mr. R.D. Macdonald, of the Canadian Commercial Corporation, was present at the meeting with Mr. Howard, Chairman of the Munitions Board, and Mr. P.M. Towe, of the Canadian Embassy, was present at the interview with Mr. Ohly.

Special Legislation

Mr. Drury outlined to the United States officials the present difficulties in the procurement by Canada of military supplies and equipment in the United States under the Mutual Defence Assistance Act, and also the effects of the "Buy American" legislation on the procurement in Canada of military supplies and equipment for the use of the United States armed services. In particular, Mr. Drury put the case for the need of special legislation to be enacted both in the United States and Canada in order to provide complete legislative freedom for each country to purchase from the other as may be expedient in the interests of mutual defence. Mr. Drury emphasized that arrangements which had been worked out for the procurement of certain equipment by Canada from the United States, such as the F86A components, could be regarded only as temporary expedients and that freedom in the exchange of equipment across the frontier should be the objective towards which both governments should be working if the military preparedness of the two countries is to be built up to meet an emergency.

Mr. Early and Mr. Leva both acknowledged the desirability of working towards the objectives outlined by Mr. Drury. However, they stressed that while the United States Administration was completely in sympathy with these objectives, it was not possible to undertake the legislative action required during the present session of the Congress, considering the crowded nature of the legislative calendar and that 1950 was an election year. They suggested that remedial interim legislation be sought by amendment of the reimbursable aid clause (Section 408(e)) of the Mutual Defence Assistance Act and that plans be discussed between the Canadian and United States Governments with a view to having special legislation relating to Canada-United States procurement problems considered by the Congress in 1951.

While Mr. Drury argued in favour of comprehensive legislation covering the overall requirements of procurement of military supplies and equipment by Canada in the United States and vice versa, as a means of implementing in the procurement field the mutual defence arrangements which have existed since the Ogdensberg Declaration, the United States officials preferred a step-by-step approach. Mr. Leva emphasized the necessity of preparing Congressional opinion before proposals for bilateral arrangements to govern Canada-United States procurement are put forward by the Administration. He said that it would be difficult to obtain an outright repeal of the "Buy American" Act. He suggested that the ground should be prepared by having the Joint Industrial Mobilization Board make a study of Canada-United States procurement problems and submit recommendations. He thought that, as a next step, provision might be incorporated in the Annual Appropriation Act of the National Military Establishment to the effect that "notwithstanding any other provision of law", procurement up to a certain amount may be made by the United States armed services for their use from Canadian sources. Mr. Drury, dissenting from this piecemeal approach, urged that consideration be given to seeking legislation comprehensive in scope and continuing over a period of time as no firm plans for industrial mobilization could be based upon special authorization inserted into annual Appropriation Acts.

Conclusions reached in the talks with Mr. Early and Mr. Leva were:

(a) that the question would have to be divided into immediate and long-range objectives;

(b) that, as an immediate objective, improvement in the arrangements governing the procurement by Canada of military equipment in the United States should be sought through amendments in the reimbursable aid clause (Section 408(e)) of the Mutual Defence Assistance Act;

(c) that action on reciprocal purchases should also be taken immediately by making use of the loop-holes provided by the discretionary powers given to the Administration under the "Buy American" Act;

(d) that the long-range problem of special remedial legislation be further explored through, if appropriate, the Joint Industrial Mobilization Board. (Leva also suggested that more specific suggestions with regard to special legislation might be put forward in a letter from Mr. Claxton to Mr. Johnson).

Reciprocal Purchases

The question of reciprocal purchases was taken up by Mr. Drury with Mr. Howard, Director of the Munitions Board. Mr. Howard, like Mr. Early and Mr. Leva, was sympathetic to the idea of working out continuing arrangements to govern procurement on a reciprocal basis, but also advocated a step-by-step approach. He referred to the study (nearly completed) by the Munitions Board of the possible procurement in Canada of military equipment for the United States armed services. He suggested that, as a first step, the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force would have to be persuaded by the Munitions Board to use their discretionary powers under the "Buy American" Act to authorize the procurement of certain specific items which were either unprocurable in the United States or could not be procured on as satisfactory terms as they could be in Canada. Mr. Howard also said that, in the first instance at least, it would probably be necessary to match United States and Canadian purchases of military equipment in dollar value. For this reason, Mr. Howard asked that he be supplied as soon as possible with a list of purchases of military equipment made by the Canadian Government in the United States, indicating their value, in the fiscal year 1949/50, and he asked for a list of items, with their value, which the Canadian Government expect to purchase in the United States in the fiscal year 1950/51. Mr. Drury explained that the idea of matching Canadian and United States procurement of military supplies dollar for dollar was not a satisfactory objective, as this consideration did not touch upon the important aim of advancing specialization and military preparedness to enable the two countries to mobilize effectively in the event of an emergency. Mr. Macdonald stated that the list of items was currently being prepared by C.C.C. and should be ready in a week or so.

Mr. Howard suggested that these were longer term objectives which required further study, possibly through the Joint Industrial Mobilization Board. Such a study might, for instance, review the principles contained in the Hyde Park Declaration, in order to bring out the kind of arrangements towards which the two countries should work in preparation for an emergency.

The Recommendations for Reciprocal Procurement to the Munitions Board

Mr. Drury discussed with General Langmead the recommendations which were in the course of preparation for consideration by the Munitions Board (composed of the Chairman, Mr. Howard, and the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force) on Canada-U.S. procurement. This study of the Munitions Board had been ordered by the U.S. Secretary of Defence in consequence of the recommendations of the 12th October, 1949, of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence. General Langmead expressed the view that special legislation to govern reciprocal procurement was not immediately realizable in view of present Congressional opinion with regard to the "Buy American" Act. As an interim measure, it was desirable to isolate certain items which were either unprocurable by the United States armed services from sources in the United States, or could be procured more satisfactorily in Canada. A study of such items by the Munitions Board staff was almost complete. If the Board will adopt the proposals of its staff, then the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force would have to use their discretionary powers under the "Buy American" Act to authorize the purchase of such items from Canada. The preparation of special legislation would require further consultation between the two governments, but this would take time. He hoped that the recommendations of the Munitions Board would include both adoption of the scheme to take advantage of the "Buy American" Act loopholes, and also a recommendation that special legislation was desirable.

Procurement Under the Mutual Defence Assistance Act

Completion of F86 Arrangements. While arrangements for the procurement of F86 components had been virtually completed, there still remained the procedural problem of deciding the exact form the final note covering the firm order of the Canadian Government to the State Department should take. The suggestion was made to Mr. Ohly that it was extremely desirable that the note be in general terms setting forth an undertaking by the Canadian Government to procure F86A components up to the amount of the Letter of Credit and specifying that details would be supplied directly to the United States Air Force by the Canadian Commercial Corporation. Mr. Ohly admitted that he himself saw no objections to this type of arrangement and undertook to do everything possible to expedite a decision.

Other Types of Military Equipment. Mr. Ohly was asked if any decisions had been reached on the procedure which would govern the procurement of items of military equipment other than F86A components. Mr. Ohly said that there had not yet been any definite decision and he was apparently unwilling to describe in any detail the procedure which might finally be proposed by the United States authorities. He said that further interdepartmental consultation was necessary. He did indicate, however, that the new procedure might make it possible for the Canadian Commercial Corporation, in cases where cash was available, to deal directly with the United States armed services.

Procurement of Avenger Aircraft. Before the meeting with Mr. Ohly, the State Department had informed the Embassy that a memorandum had been drafted which recommended that the State Department, upon receipt of a request from the Canadian Government to purchase seventy-five Avenger aircraft from the United States Navy, should ask the Department of Defence that the Canadian request be treated as expeditiously as possible and that procurement should be carried out outside the framework of the M.D.A.A. under surplus disposal procedures if possible. This memorandum had been signed by Mr. Perkins, Assistant Secretary for European Affairs, but would have to be agreed to by Mr. Ohly, Deputy Director of the M.D.A. before State Department policy with respect to this particular transaction was determined.

Mr. Ohly was careful not to commit himself. He expressed an apprehension lest such a transaction might prejudice Congressional acceptance of amendments to the Mutual Defence Act. He thought it might be necessary to secure the informal approval of certain Congressmen before proceeding further. However, he undertook to expedite a decision and was not unhopeful that this transaction would be authorized.

Amendments to the Mutual Defence Assistance Act

Mr. Ohly said that the Administration expected to seek several amendments to the M.D.A.A. from the Congress this spring. With particular respect to Section 408(e), he said that an amendment would probably be introduced which would enable governments to pay the full cost of contracts in instalments instead of paying the full cost in advance of the contracts. This amendment would be designed to obviate the necessity of tying up for an unnecessarily long period foreign governments' funds. The legal difficulties of this type of transaction, in view of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act, were explained by Mr. Drury in detail to Mr. Ohly. He agreed that there appeared to be a serious incompatibility between Canadian and American legislation and said that it would be most helpful if we could present an informal memorandum outlining our difficulties and setting forth the relevant provision of the Consolidated Revenue and Audit Act. On the question of timing, he explained that the legislative proposals had to be submitted to the Bureau of the Budget for approval well in advance of the Congressional hearings. As the hearings on the Mutual Defence Assistance Act are scheduled to start in the middle of April, it would be necessary to have all legislative proposals (including our own suggestions for change in Section 408(e)) submitted to the Bureau of the Budget within ten days.

With regard to the possibilities of more comprehensive legislation in the future, Mr. Ohly was very cautious, but thought that the idea of special legislation, on a reciprocal and bilateral basis, including the provision of a revolving fund, might profitably be explored. While he thought that proposals for such special legislation could not be submitted this year, it need not be postponed into "the remote future".

Conclusions

From these talks with United States officials, certain conclusions follow:

(a) There is sympathy and willingness to co-operate with the working out of mutually acceptable arrangements to govern Canada-United States procurement.

(b) It is not deemed practicable by the United States Administration to initiate legislative action during the present session of the Congress (1950) to obtain special legislative action to govern Canada-United States procurement.

(c) A first step can be taken to enable the United States armed services to purchase equipment in Canada through the discretionary powers of the "Buy American" Act.

(d) Further consultation is required between the Canadian and United States governments to prepare the way for special legislation which would be sought, on a reciprocal basis, by the two countries, if possible in the year 1951.

(e) This consultation could take place, if deemed appropriate, through the Joint Industrial Mobilization Board.

(f) The sponsors of this special legislation, on the United States side, would be the Department of Defence; a further statement of objectives in regard to special procurement legislation desired by Canada should be made in a letter from the Minister of National Defence in Canada to the Secretary of Defence in Washington.

(g) Some remedial action can, and should, be sought through amendment of the Mutual Defence Assistance Act by the submission to the State Department, of a statement of the present defects in Section 408(e) of that Act.

(h) The United States Munitions Board should be encouraged to press for the necessary authorization within the limits of the "Buy American" Act to procure certain specified items of equipment for the United States armed services from Canada.

REVISION OF MUTUAL DEFENCE ASSISTANCE ACT

Your messages EX-533 and EX-534.

1. Ignatieff and Keith saw Ohly, Deputy Director of the Mutual Defence Assistance Programme in the State Department on Thursday, March 30th, and left with him the written comments on our difficulties under Section 408(e) of the MDAA as contained in your message EX-534.

2. This written message was supplemented orally with the comments suggested in your message EX-533. Ohly was very appreciative of the written statement and said that it would be helpful in considering amendments to the M.D.A.A. As regards establishment of the revolving fund, Ohly explained that there would be difficulty in making special provision for a revolving fund related to Canadian procurement under the M.D.A.A. However, (as he had told Mr. Drury) he was willing to explore the idea in connection with special legislation on a reciprocal and bilateral basis which would require further consultation between the two Governments. It is unlikely, he said, that this consultation could take place until after the hearings on the Mutual Defence Assistance Programme had been completed as these would occupy most of the time of himself and his assistants.

3. With regard to the possibility of inserting a separate title in the Mutual Defence Assistance Act making provision for meeting the requirements of our general accounting legislation, Ohly said that he had been giving careful consideration to this question but so far held the opinion that they could not introduce successfully any bilateral feature into the M.D.A.A. legislation because this Act is designed to cover the full range of foreign military assistance in general terms.

4. With regard to the amendment of Section 408(e) at present under consideration, Ohly said that official thinking had not yet been firmed up. They are still considering an alteration in the present wording of Section 408(e) to permit payment of "full cost" in instalments and also the writing down of value of equipment sold from stock or surplus on account of depreciation or obsolescence. Ohly said that he would like to include in the revision of 408(e) to be proposed at this session of the Congress some wording which would help to meet our accounting difficulties. He suggested immediate consideration of the idea that collateral security either in full or in part might be provided by the purchasing country so that actual payments by Canada could be deferred until they matched more closely evidence to us of performance on the contract, or delivery. This procedure would be intended to guarantee the United States against cost or risk of cost to the United States. Ohly said that this was an idea which had occurred to him and had not been developed at all and invited our reaction as soon as possible.

5. Your comments on this point would be appreciated as soon as possible. It is realized that there may be difficulties with the collateral procedure, but it was thought best to encourage Ohly's evident desire to be helpful.

Sir,

As I [you] anticipated in the enclosure to your despatch No. 797 of March 27 [29], which summarized Mr. Drury's recent discussions in Washington on military procurement, the Minister of National Defence has now sent a letter to the United States Secretary of Defense urging special legislation that would authorize:

(a) United States defence purchases in Canada;

(b) The establishment in Washington, on a reciprocal basis, of a U.S. revolving fund to cover the initial financing of Canadian purchases made through the U.S. Department of Defence.

2. Enclosed are copies of the following documents, the first of which was received this evening:

(1) Two copies of Mr. Claxton's letter of April 15 to Secretary Johnson;

(2) One copy of Mr. Drury's letter of March 30† to Mr. Heeney which enclosed a draft letter to Secretary Johnson that was very similar to the final document.

3. Mr. Claxton consulted the members of the Cabinet Defence Committee before sending his letter to Secretary Johnson.

4. You may wish to give a copy of it to the State Department for its information. I understand from Mr. Drury that A/V/M Campbell informed you that he was having the letter delivered to Secretary Johnson.

Dear Mr. Secretary,

In the hope that I might be able to present some definite proposals, I have delayed acknowledging your kind note of March 20th,† concerning the recent visit of my Deputy Minister to Washington. These proposals together with background material with which you will be familiar I have incorporated in the attached memorandum. You will see that they suggest that certain action be taken by each of our countries in order that our military procurement policies may have the flexibility which has proved so advantageous to our other joint military activities.

The view, expressed at the recent meetings at The Hague, that regional solutions should be found for regional problems, suggests that special arrangements within the North American Regional Group are to be sought, and would likely be welcomed by our colleagues on the Defence Committee.[15]

Please let me express my appreciation for the great courtesy and friendliness shown by your officers to my Deputy Minister whilst in Washington. The discussions confirmed our singleness of purpose in our two countries' work together for security and peace.

I earnestly hope that in our joint interests, it will be possible to re-establish in the procurement field the same spirit of useful collaboration which existed during the late war.

With kind personal regards.

Yours sincerely,
[Brooke Claxton]

Memorandum

SECRET [Ottawa], April 15, 1950

UNITED STATES-CANADIAN MILITARY PROCUREMENT

Since the Ogdensburg Declaration of August, 1940, by Prime Minister King and President Roosevelt, establishing the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, co-operation in defence has been basic to the policies of both our governments. During the war, and following the Hyde Park Declaration of 1941, this co-operation was especially close, not only in arrangements for direct defence but also in the field of military production and supply.

2. Since the war the policy of joint defence has been often reiterated by both governments, notably in the joint statement of February 12, 1947, which announced such specific measures of co-operation as: interchange of Service personnel; encouragement of common designs and standards in arms, equipment, organization and methods of training; and mutual and reciprocal availability of military, naval and air facilities in each country. Joint training exercises and joint projects for experimental and other defence purposes have been frequent and successful. Above all, joint defence planning has become fundamental. Recently our common defence interests have been broadened by our membership in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Co-operation and collaboration in defence between our two countries has advanced to a degree that is unique among independent countries.

3. In the field of production and supply the degree of co-operation reached during the war has, however, greatly declined. On the one hand, Canadian Military production for U.S. account has virtually ceased; on the other, although since the war Canada has been turning to the adoption of U.S. military equipment, procurement of this equipment in the United States has become very difficult.

4. In the event of war, actual or anticipated, speedy expansion of military production by the industries of both the United States and Canada would be much more urgent than it was in 1939. The maintenance of a nucleus capacity for military production capable of rapid expansion in an emergency, is thus imperative in the interests of our common defence. Planning of military production in advance would also seem essential to permit of specialization to achieve optimum use of North American productive resources, to provide for dispersal of essential industry in order to lessen the vulnerability of North American industry to enemy attack and to provide alternative plants.

5. Preliminary steps to this end have already been taken through the establishment of the United States-Canada Joint Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee. Pending completion of examination of the whole problem by this committee, the procurement policies of the United States, if suitably designed, might well serve as an extremely important factor in maintaining a nucleus of capacity for military production in Canada, and in encouraging specialization in military production by Canadian industry. The potential capacity of Canadian industry for military production, although small in comparison with that of the United States, far exceeds domestic requirements. Seventy percent of all our recent war production went to other countries. In many cases domestic requirements together with orders for export are not sufficient to maintain a nucleus capacity in a state of preparedness. As was well illustrated by developments during the recent war, many Canadian industries are capable of production for the United States, either for its own use or for mutual aid to other countries. Even relatively small orders by the United States government placed with Canadian industry would go far to maintain this desirable nucleus. In this connection, information about the productive capacity of certain Canadian industries has recently been furnished the United States Munitions Board.

6. The Canadian and the United States Chiefs of Staff have recognized that it is important to have the greatest possible degree of standardization of military equipment between forces which, in the event of war would certainly be called upon to act in concert. Restraints upon the use of common sources of supply in many instances act as a deterrent to standardization and frequently prolong the continuance in use of differing types of weapons. Present difficulties in attaining common standards frequently stem from procurement and supply problems rather than from inability of the military authorities to agree on these standards.

7. Unfortunately there are certain legislative barriers to effective co-operation in the field of procurement and supply. The recently enacted Mutual Defence Assistance Act has raised serious administrative and legal obstacles in the way of Canada's purchase of military equipment, despite the fact that Canada has been prepared to pay cash on delivery or on performance of contract services for all equipment acquired and has not asked, nor intends to ask, for any grant under the Act.

8. On the other hand, the "Buy American" Act prohibits purchases of military equipment in Canada for the account of the United States Armed Forces in the United States unless the appropriate official of the United States Administration declares that it is in the United States national interest that such purchases be made. It would be unsafe to conclude that continued reliance on exceptional action of this sort would provide a sound basis for joint planning for industrial mobilization.

9. Recent discussions between officials of the United States Defense Department and the Canadian Department of National Defence have led to the conclusion that, in order to overcome these difficulties, legislation is necessary. There is recognition of the considerable difficulties of so amending or modifying the provisions of the Mutual Defence Assistance Act as to provide mutually workable arrangements.

10. The most satisfactory solution to these difficulties would appear to require an Act of the United States Congress. Based on the very special United States-Canada defence relationship, such an Act would authorize the United States Armed Forces to procure military equipment in Canada to the extent that our common defence policy indicated. Furthermore, to make possible Canadian procurement in the United States of military equipment of types which cannot be obtained directly from non-governmental sources, a revolving fund which would be used as the initial means of financing such procurement, could be established by such an Act; and the U.S. Armed Forces might continue to be authorized to provide the procurement and inspection services now envisaged under the Mutual Defence Assistance Act.

11. For its part Canada would be prepared to set up a corresponding revolving fund for use by the U.S. Armed Forces and would offer corresponding procurement and inspection services.

12. If such steps are taken a major advance will have been made in aligning our supply and production arrangements with our military co-operation and many obstacles to standardization and the implementation of defence planning will have been removed.

REVISION OF THE MUTUAL DEFENCE ASSISTANCE ACT

Ignatieff went to see Snow on Monday, 8th May, to discover the present status of the plans of the State Department regarding the revision of the Mutual Defence Assistance Act insofar as it relates to the provisions for procurement of military equipment in the United States by purchase under section 408(E) of the M.D.A.A.

2. Snow told him that, after a careful examination of the present law as well as consultation on the kind of amendments that would have a chance of acceptance by the Congress, it had been decided in the State Department to confine changes in section 408(E) to the following three points:

(I) To increase the discretionary powers of the President on the choice of countries to which procurement assistance through purchase might be extended; thus, the amendment would not limit the application of this article to nations which had "joined with the United States in a collective defence and regional arrangement";

(II) In the case of purchase of equipment from United States Government stocks, provision to be included for depreciation in value or obsolescence; the wording to be used is "the fair value" instead of "full cost actual or estimated";

(III) As regards method of payment, the current proposal is that the President should be given discretionary powers to accept "dependable guarantee of full payment" instead of the "full cost" prior to the execution of contracts.

3. Murphy (Controller of the M.D.A.A.) stated in a later discussion with Keith that the adoption of the third proposed amendment would raise the following problems:

(a) The arrangement of more liberal terms for some countries would lead to recriminations;

(b) If only an assurance to pay were required, it would leave unsettled the question of where the funds were to come from, and it would still be difficult if not impossible for the United States Government to enter into a contract without receiving some form of negotiable instrument from the purchasing country;

(c) Even a ruling by the President to the effect that a negotiable instrument was not required could not be translated into an instruction to a purchasing officer of the Defence Department; the latter would not be required to initiate a contract unless in his judgment there was adequate protection. For these reasons this proposal is still under close study.

4. Ignatieff pointed out to Snow that while these changes were no doubt helpful they did not appear to meet the difficulties arising from our accounting legislation with regard to certification of performance on contracts to which reference had been made in the previous discussions of this question, and particularly during Mr. Drury's visit. Ignatieff recalled that we had given an analysis of our problem to the State Department on March 30th. Snow said that our difficulties had been appreciated and consideration had been given to the problem of establishing a revolving fund. However, the conclusion had been reached that it was not practicable to submit a proposal at the present session of the Congress. In fact, Mr. Ohly, the new Director of the M.D.A.A., is apparently rather apprehensive of the reactions of the present session of Congress to the M.D.A.A. proposals which are to be submitted.

5. While realizing that the establishment of a revolving fund would probably be required to meet our accounting problems, Snow expressed the hope that it might be possible to work out some form of inspection procedure within the provisions of the law as now proposed whereby Canadian inspectors might spot check some of the important equipment items and thereby approach more closely Canadian accounting requirements. Without losing sight of our revolving fund objective, it would appear to be advantageous to explore the inspection and accounting possibilities again, once procurement and payment action under the F86A contracts is actually under way; it was the sense of the discussions with Snow that such a review would be carried out when some practical experience had been gained from the F86A transaction.

6. It should be kept in mind that the proposed amendments to the M.D.A.A. Authorization Bill have not been approved by the President as yet and until that action occurs they cannot be considered as administrative proposals. Their fate before Congress is, of course, even less predictable.

7. Congressional hearings are due to commence on May 24th and their progress will be reported.

SECRET Washington, May 13, 1950

Dear Mr. Minister,

Referring to my letter of 5 May 1950,[16] I wish to inform you further that on 5 May 1950 I issued a directive to the Secretaries of the three military departments and to the Chairman of the Munitions Board requesting that a coordinated Department of Defense program for reciprocal purchasing of military equipment with Canada be developed for fiscal year 1951 within the range of 15 to 25 million dollars.

A thorough study of a reciprocal procurement program, as recommended to the US-Canada Permanent Joint Board on Defense, has been made by interested offices of this Department. As a result of this study, the Munitions Board recommended to me a reciprocal purchasing arrangement to the extent of 15 to 25 million dollars for fiscal year 1951.

Potential benefits of a reciprocal procurement program both to Canada and to the United States are great and such cooperation will contribute substantially to the speed with which the two countries will be able to participate jointly in mobilizing in the event of war.

It is believed that the most effective procedure for developing a reciprocal purchasing program might be for representatives of your government to maintain liaison with the Munitions Board. Therefore, it is suggested that appropriate Canadian representatives be designated to participate with the staff of the Munitions board in establishing procedure for a reciprocal purchasing program.

I enjoyed discussing this, and other matters with you during your recent visits.

With my kindest personal regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

LOUIS JOHNSON

Memorandum by Secretary of Defense of United States

SECRET Washington, May 5, 1950

For: Secretaries of the Army, the Navy, the Air Force; Chairman, Munitions Board

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE POLICY AND DIRECTIVE—RECIPROCAL PURCHASING OF MILITARY EQUIPMENT WITH CANADA

1. The U.S.-Canada Permanent Joint Board on Defense at its 12 October 1949 meeting requested that policy decisions required to resolve the problem of U.S.-Canada reciprocal purchasing of military equipment be undertaken as being in the national interest of the United States and in the interest of Atlantic community defense. It is the purpose of this memorandum to establish the basic Department of Defense policy on reciprocal purchasing of military equipment with Canada for FY 1951.

2. The contributions which Canada made during the last war and the resources which Canada could bring to bear in defense of our common democratic principles are substantial. The magnitude of the military-industrial tasks for which the United States must plan do exceed the resources of the United States. It is, therefore, necessary that in Department of Defense preparation for and planning for a military emergency, adequate steps be taken to insure the availability of Canadian industrial production potential in support of the common cause.

3. While Canadian industrial production potential is substantial there is a degree of internal unbalance which forces purchase in the United States of some materials and some manufactured parts for military equipment. The financing of Canadian purchases in the United States during FY 1951 requires that provision be made for sustaining a volume of reciprocal purchasing of military equipment on the scale of 15 to 25 million dollars per annum.

4. Failure to develop a Department of Defense reciprocal purchasing arrangement with Canada, of the scope as established herein, would be inconsistent with the public interest.

5. It is desired that the Secretaries of Army, Navy and Air Force, acting through the Munitions Board, develop a coordinated Department of Defense program for reciprocal purchasing of military equipment with Canada for FY 1951 within the range of 15 to 25 million dollars.

6. Upon approval by the Munitions Board of the Department of Defense program for FY 1951, the Secretaries of the Army, Navy and Air Force will implement their respective procurement responsibilities under the program. Reports of progress will be submitted to the Munitions Board upon call by the Chairman of the Board.

REVISION OF THE MUTUAL DEFENCE ASSISTANCE ACT

Murphy, the Comptroller of M.D.A.A., mentioned in a conversation today that the Administration's recommendations for the revision of the Mutual Defence Assistance Act were now awaiting Presidential approval and it was not expected that there would be any last minute changes in their content.

2. The recommendations appear to be the same as those reported by teletype message WA-1076 dated the 10th of May, after a conversation with Snow.

3. Murphy mentioned specifically that points (II) and (III) of paragraph 2 of teletype message WA-1076 were unchanged. These are respectively, the use of "fair value" instead of "full cost actual or estimated" with respect to purchase of equipment from stocks; and the substitution of the phrase "dependable guarantee of full payment" instead of "full cost" for the definition of the method of payment.

4. Point (I) of paragraph 2 relating to the discretionary power of the President to nominate countries to which procurement assistance through purchase might be extended, was not mentioned by Murphy, but there is no indication that this provision has been dropped.

5. The provision of "dependable guarantee of full payment" would be interpreted by the President or his appointee in the light of the credit status of the country concerned. Murphy thought that country A, with a poor credit standing, might have to pay up the full amount of cash required in advance; whereas country B, with an excellent credit standing, might be required only to furnish assurance by means of a note that payment would be made as required by the contracts entered into on country B's behalf.

6. Insofar as Canada is concerned, this would probably mean that our formal assurance given in writing to meet payments required in any contract, and on an irrevocable basis, would suffice instead of the present arrangement calling for the provision of a letter of credit. It would be equivalent to the provision of a promissory note payable on demand. This arrangement would not meet our accounting objectives, and would not, from our point of view, approach more closely the revolving fund arrangement that we desire.

7. Murphy stated that the Revolving Fund possibility was discussed before the Bureau of the Budget and did not encounter any objections in principle. It was dropped because M.D.A.A. policy has dictated that revisions suggested to Congress at this time should conform as closely as possible to existing legislation. It is hoped that the amendments introduced will be uncontroversial and will facilitate a smooth passage for the amending legislation.

8. It is considered that Canadian representations have made a favourable impression, but they have not been able to overcome the reluctance of United States officials to hazard the introduction of a controversial feature at this stage of the M.D.A.A. legislation.

MUTUAL DEFENCE ASSISTANCE PROGRAMME

1. An opportunity occurred today to discuss with Ohly, the new Director of the mutual defence assistance programme in the State Department, the amendments to the Mutual Defence Assistance Act which have just been approved by the Senate, as well as the broader questions of procurement policies connected with Canadian mutual aid which you asked us to discuss informally with United States authorities in your despatch No. 1846 of June 25th,† following the last meeting of the panel on economic aspects of defence questions held on June 6th and 7th.[17] Ignatieff and Keith attended this meeting, which was arranged by Snow, who is now temporarily attached to the M.D.A.P. staff pending his posting to Norway as M.D.A.P. representative there. Ohly expressed himself as definitely satisfied with the amendments authorized by the Senate in the Mutual Defence Assistance Act but he admitted that these would not fully meet our difficulties.

2. The hearings in Committee had gone well and Ohly was pleased that the total sum which had been sought by the Administration had now been authorized by the Senate. He expected that the House action would follow without any material change.

3. As regards the amendments to Section 408(e) relating to reimbursable purchase, Ohly made the following points:

(a) That it would enable us to buy equipment declared surplus at "fair value" instead of at "full cost". Senator Taft's amendment, as altered at the request of the State Department, merely represented a definition of "fair value" which would not be restrictive in effect;

(b) That the amendment now legalized payment by instalment;

[17] Voir le document 513./See Document 513.

(c) That the provision for payment requiring "a dependable undertaking to pay the full amount" represented the best that could be got from the Congress, bearing in mind that the number of countries to which this type of reimbursable aid was to be made available at the discretion of the President had been extended. Safeguarding Congress against indirect appropriation or loss of funds owing to defaults in payment had to be balanced against easing the terms of payment for countries like Canada.

(d) Although the new wording would not solve our accounting problems, it provided greater flexibility in negotiating particular contracts. Moreover, it was realized that Canada represented a special case as regards the validity of its credit and this point had been fully pressed in the executive hearings by Ohly himself, as well as by Mr. Johnson and others.

4. Summing up, Ohly expressed the opinion that Section 408(e) as amended, represented the best that could be obtained from the Congress at this time in a general enactment. No one in the Administration had overlooked Canada's valid arguments in favour of a revolving fund to facilitate mutual procurement and this was recognized to be an objective to be sought by special legislation covering the mutual needs of the two countries.

5. These remarks led to a discussion of the wider problem raised in the discussion of the panel on economic aspects of defence questions held on June 6th and 7th. A brief outline was given to Ohly of the problems raised in the panel, with particular reference to the question of replacement of any items of Canadian equipment that might be made available to our partners in the North Atlantic Treaty under mutual aid, either through Canadian production or by procurement in the United States. The suggestion was made that this question might be explored informally with the responsible officials in the departments and agencies concerned in the United States Government.

6. Ohly responded sympathetically to the statement of the problem and remarked at once that the question of replacement through procurement in the United States was closely connected with the development of a reciprocal purchase programme for the United States armed services in Canada. He, therefore, suggested that the matter should be discussed with Hubert Howard, Director of the Munitions Board, as well as with himself in an informal meeting. It was also recalled that some aspects of the problem concerned the work of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Board on which both Howard and Symington represented the United States. As this Board would be meeting in Ottawa on the 7th of August, it was obviously desirable to do some exploratory work on the problem before the Board meets and to ensure that the American principals would be fully briefed before the Ottawa meeting.

7. A practical difficulty, however, arises from Howard's absence in Europe as Chairman of the North Atlantic Military Production and Supply Board. Ohly said that he was not expected back in Washington before the 24th of July. A preliminary informal gathering, it was suggested, might be arranged with officials of the Munitions Board, such as General [Patrick] Timberlake and [C.A.] Sullivan, if we desired. It was agreed that Ohly would arrange such a meeting at our request at any time.

8. I believe that it would contribute substantially to the success of even the informal exploration now projected if you could indicate in more specific terms than are given in the panel minutes, the questions which you would like to have discussed.

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, July 25, 1950

Dear Mr. Drury,

You telephoned me this morning asking if we had any information about how the United States proposed to spend on additional military appropriations the $10 billions announced in the President's speech.[18] I was speaking to Mr. Ignatieff a few minutes later and he gave me the following figures, which were given to Congress yesterday:

Supplementary Appropriations Asked for Yesterday by the Armed Forces

$10.486 billions, divided as follows:

Army—$3.063 billions;
Navy and Marines—$2.648 billions;

[18] Voir/See Public Papers of the Presidents of the United States of America: Harry S. Truman 1950, Washington: United States Government Printing Office, 1965, Document 193, pp. 527-537.

Air Force—$4.535 billions;
Establishment-Wide Activities—$240 millions.

All this includes $3.344 billions for aircraft, and $2.646 billions for tanks, guns, and Army equipment, and includes an increase of 600,000 men in the three Services; that is, 40% increase, up to 2.100 millions total armed strength, which is nearly 100,000 over the present statutory ceiling.

Mr. Ignatieff also drew my attention to a news item in the New York Times of today's date (which has not yet come to hand), reporting Mr. Symington's representations to a Congressional Committee yesterday. According to Mr. Ignatieff, the three items noted as in short supply are steel, aluminum, rubber, and controls are being asked for these commodities.

Mr. Ignatieff quite agreed with the likelihood that the United States, under their accelerated programme, will wish to buy from us more than the amount suggested some time ago for reciprocal purchases of equipment. Mr. Ignatieff is meeting State Department officials again on Thursday and will likely learn more of their proposals with respect to purchases in Canada. He will be in Ottawa next week for a meeting of the Interdepartmental Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions.

Yours sincerely,

R.A. MACKAY

P.S.: Since dictating the above, Mr. Byrd, of the United States Embassy, was in my office on other matters and I took the opportunity of sounding him out, since I knew he had been taking part in discussions in Washington last week preparatory to the Joint Industrial Mobilization Board meeting. Mr. Byrd confirmed my speculation, that the $10 billion programme might affect U.S. policy with respect to purchases in Canada. He said that the $25 millions figure proposed previously for reciprocal purchasing was now regarded as a minimum and that the real question at the moment was not how much could be spent in Canada but how much could Canadian industry produce. I asked whether there was any possibility of the U.S. considering anything like a revised Hyde Park Agreement. Mr. Byrd gave me to understand that such a proposal was likely to be made. He said they were also speculating in Washington on our capacity to produce for mutual aid to Europe and our willingness to contribute.

As you suggested, the $10 billion programme may well result in exporting inflation to Canada.

1. Ignatieff, Keith and Towe met with Satterthwaite and Benninghoff yesterday afternoon to obtain further information about the proposals which Mr. Symington might put forward at the meeting of the JIMC on August 8th. They were shown what was termed a "statement of principles", which had apparently not yet been cleared in the Munitions Board and the State Department. A paraphrase of this statement of principles is contained in my immediately following teletype. Satterthwaite said he hoped that the United States proposals, incorporating any Canadian suggestions, could be put into more or less final form before the August 8th meeting of the JIMC. These principles or agreed objectives could then be used as a basis for common emergency legislation or executive action in the United States and in Canada, although it should be noted that the United States Government is already taking unilateral action under the emergency measures now under consideration by Congress.

2. The State Department officials recognize that the proposed statement of principles does not cover the same areas of consideration as the Hyde Park Declaration. However, they recalled that both the content and the form of the statement had to be within the terms of reference of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee, and that, in their opinion, the proposals went about as far as they could within this limit. They would like, however, to see an additional clause referring to financial circumstances in the sense given in paragraph 3 of my immediately following teletype. We were given to understand that it was a State Department idea to add such a reference but this had not yet been considered fully with the NSRB.

3. Satterthwaite and Benninghoff indicated that they would like to have some informal reactions to the proposed statement before the meeting of August 8th. [N.R.] Chappell is to be given further details when he meets [Fred] Wynant early next week.

4. The statement, if agreed in the JIMC, would then be recommended to each Government. If acceptable to the respective Governments, it would be formalized in an exchange of diplomatic notes. There was no clear indication of the timing which might be proposed for the exchange of notes but Satterthwaite and Benninghoff indicated that it would have to await, as far as the United States Government was concerned, the Congressional endorsement of the President's proposed controls which is expected in the latter part of August.[19]

5. There was some inconclusive discussion on the means that might have to be adopted by legislation or executive action to implement such an agreement, particularly paragraph 4 of the proposed statement dealing with controls. Under a condition of partial mobilization, emergency powers might be lacking for the enforcement of some controls at least and this presumably will be one of the matters which will require clarification at the August meeting.

The text of the statement of principles referred to in my immediately preceding teletype was not made available on the grounds that the statement was only partially cleared through the State Department, and has not been accepted by Symington. The following summary of its contents has been assembled from rough notes prepared from a reading of the text:

Statement of Principles

In recognition of the common problems resulting from the international situation, it is agreed that the two countries will cooperate in all respects, and particularly to accomplish a joint economic effort, to achieve a common defense, and to coordinate production, so that the best results will be obtained.

The following principles are established to facilitate the attainment of these objectives:

(1) Production will be integrated for the purpose of achieving the maximum output of essential goods;

(2) Resources of raw materials will be controlled and allocated to further the purpose of achieving maximum production;

(3) Technical knowledge and skills will be freely exchanged;

(4) Mutually consistent emergency controls will be instituted for the purpose of accomplishing comparable results, and whenever possible joint discussions will be held prior to the institution of such controls;

(5) These principles will become effective at once, and related steps will be taken by each country to achieve the desired results.

2. These principles are consistent with the North Atlantic Treaty and the United Nations Charter. End of text.

3. Consideration is being given to adding a sixth provision to state more directly that international financial considerations will be kept in mind during the development of the other principles. In its present rough form this provision states that financial arrangements will be carried out by both countries that will facilitate the accomplishment of these objectives.

My messages WA-1622 and 1623 of July 28th. JIMC meeting and statement of principles.

1. In another brief conversation with Ignatieff this morning, Benninghoff said that as there was considerable support for the ideas set out in the proposed statement of principles, as reported in my WA-1623, in the United States departments and agencies concerned, it would be helpful to know at the earliest possible stage what the initial reactions might be at the official level in Ottawa. He hoped, therefore, that Chappell might indicate at least whether the ideas which are being formulated in Washington in regard to the statement of principles would have a favourable response in Ottawa. He readily agreed that the wording, on the United States side, had not yet reached a stage of precision and therefore the United States authorities would be open to suggestions from our side, particularly through the channel of Chappell to Winant, as Winant has been made chiefly responsible for the preparations of the JIMC meeting on August 8th, on the United States side.

2. Benninghoff threw a little more light on the clause relating to international financial considerations referred to in paragraph 3 of my message 1623. The specific text which the State Department and Munitions Board are discussing is as follows: "The two Governments will endeavour to institute such financial arrangements as will facilitate the achievement of these objectives." He explained that what the State Department had in mind was some general statement of objective in the financial field which could be used, if necessary, for the reconsideration of such legislation or executive practice as may be found to impede the implementation of industrial mobilization measures which may have to be applied in the present emergency. He mentioned, for instance, the application of the Buy America Act, on the United States side, and the Foreign Exchange Control Act, on our side, as examples of the kind of financial practices which might have to come up for review. He stressed that whatever bilateral steps might be contemplated or taken under this head would have to accord with the multilateral obligations which have been assumed by both countries. It was for this reason that it is proposed that there should be a reference to the United Nations Charter and the North Atlantic Treaty. Some United States officials here, he said, would also like to see specific reference to GATT in this connection. As regards the possible implications of such a statement upon our foreign exchange position, Benninghoff said that the intent of the proposed financial clause, as well as the other clauses taken together, would be to provide a basis for action which would ensure that there would not, at least, be any increased drain on Canadian reserves, as a result of mutual defence and mobilization measures. He also remarked that, as far as the United States was concerned, the 15 to 25 million dollar limit previously adopted with regard to the United States Reciprocal Purchasing Programme in Canada would now be regarded as inoperative and no stated limits are being considered.

3. In order to facilitate your consideration of the problem of parallel controls which are related to my messages 1622 and 1623, I am sending you, in a separate message,† a summary of the legislative status of the United States emergency control measures presently under consideration by Congress, and of the documentation which has been sent forward to date.

Your Teletype WA-1623 of July 28, 1950, statement of principles for J.I.M.C. meeting.

1. Chappell has returned from a meeting with Winant in New England. He reports that Winant was very much surprised that the State Department should have discussed this statement of principles with officials of your office without informing N.S.R.B. The statement of principles given you appear to have been based on a statement of principles originating from N.S.R.B., but the State Department's statement appears to be substantially different from the original. Chappell did not show Winant your telegram, although he gave him a summary of the statement of principles in the telegram. Further, Winant made clear that at least at his level in N.S.R.B., it had merely been decided to work out a joint paper which would be put on the shelf to be used in the event of an emergency and that there was no expectations that it would be proceeded with at once.

2. The immediately succeeding teletype contains an agreed statement worked out by Winant and Chappell at their meeting. The second following telegram contains the original statement of principles given by N.S.R.B. to the State Department. It was thought that you should have both these in your discussions with officials of the State Department.

3. Later in the day, I hope to send you a telegram commenting on the statement of principles given you by the State Department. As you will see from our comments, we have made use of the original statement drafted by N.S.R.B. as given by Winant to Chappell.

My immediately preceding telegram, Statement of Principles for JIMC.

AGREED STATEMENT BY EXECUTIVE OFFICERS OF BOTH COUNTRIES RE GENERAL STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES FOR AUGUST 8TH JIMC MEETINGS

Mr. Fred Winant, Director of the Foreign Activities Office of NSRB, and Mr. N.R. Chappell, Canadian Executive Officer of JIMC, met July 30th and 31st in Rutland, Vermont, to discuss arrangements for the August 8th meeting of JIMC.

One of the main items discussed was the question of a probable U.S. proposal in the nature of principles to govern U.S.-Canadian economic relationships in the event of an emergency.

Mr. Winant and Mr. Chappell went over the background which led to this proposal, and as of the current date the status is:

(1) A draft proposal of principles has been forwarded to U.S. State by the NSRB.

(2) Conversations have been held between NSRB and U.S. State, and between U.S. State and the Canadian Embassy, Washington.

(NSRB has not been included in the meetings between U.S. State and the Canadian Embassy Washington.)

(3) The proposal has been cleared at staff level in NSRB but not by Mr. Symington, Chairman of NSRB, or Mr. Howard, Chairman of the Munitions Board. The status of clearance in U.S. State is now known, although U.S. State submitted a revised draft to Mr. Winant late July 28th.

(4) Mr. Winant passed to Mr. Chappell a copy of the NSRB draft and cover sheet originally forwarded to U.S. State.

(5) This draft clearly indicates that the proposed principles are enunciated within the general terms of an emergency situation.

(6) The NSRB draft follows the original concept of preparing a paper for possible agreement by the principals which might serve as a basis for recommendations to the two Governments.

(7) There is no indication of definition of "in the event of an emergency" in the NSRB draft.

(8) The NSRB draft does not attempt to indicate any phasing or timing or an exchange of notes, or of a joint declaration; nor does it preclude the possibility of substantive changes or additions, leaving those matters for determination by the two Governments. Statement ends.

My second preceding teletype.
Original statement of principles as drafted by N.S.R.B. given by Winant to Chappell, July 28th.

PROPOSED PRINCIPLES TO GOVERN US/CANADIAN ECONOMIC RELATIONSHIPS IN TIME OF EMERGENCY

The common interests of Canada and the United States in defense, their proximity, and the complementary characteristics of their resources were recognized in the establishment of the Joint U.S.-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee (JIMC), created by an exchange of notes between the two governments in April 1949.[20] The notes provide that the Committee coordinate the industrial mobilization planning efforts of the two countries and consider what recommendations in the field of industrial mobilization planning should be made to each government. The notes also provide that the Committee cooperate on matters of industrial mobilization with the permanent Joint Board on Defense, U.S.-Canada, created by the Prime Minister and the President in August 1940.

It now appears advisable that the members of the JIMC agree on certain general principles as further guides to accelerated planning and as the bases for prompt action in the event of emergency. A regular meeting of the Committee is scheduled for August 8, and it is proposed that the members of the Committee adopt the statement of principles which follows.

[20] Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1949, N° 8./See Canada, Treaty Series, 1949, No. 8.

It will be noted that the statement provides that any bilateral arrangements between the United States and Canada must be consistent with their commitments under the North Atlantic Treaty and the United Nations Charter.

Recommendation

That the members of JIMC (1) approve the attached statement of principles to govern the economic relationships between the U.S. and Canada in the event of emergency; (2) recommend them to their respective governments for final decision in time of emergency by the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada; and (3) accept them in the meantime as guides for further JIMC planning.

Statement of Principles

In recognition of the common problems faced by the peoples of our respective countries in the present international situation, it is agreed that our governments shall cooperate in all respects practicable to the end that the economic efforts of the two countries shall be joined in a common defense effort and that the production and resources of both countries shall be used for the best combined results.

The following principles are established for the purpose of facilitating these objectives:

1. Each country shall produce those articles in an integrated program of requirements for essential goods which will result in the required output in the minimum of time.

2. The combined resources of scarce raw materials and goods required to carry out this joint program shall be so controlled and allocated as to provide optimum production.

3. The technical knowledge and productive skills within both countries shall be freely exchanged to the extent feasible in furtherance of production.

4. United States and Canadian emergency controls shall be mutually consistent in their objectives, and shall be so designed and administered as to achieve comparable effects in each country. To the extent possible, there shall be joint discussion prior to the institution of any system of controls in either country which affects the other.

5. These principles are to become effective at once, and each government shall promptly take the action necessary for their implementation.

It is the conviction of both governments that action based on these principles will be consistent with and essential to their commitments under the North Atlantic Treaty and the United Nations Charter. Text ends. Message ends.

TOP SECRET

Reference your WA-1623 of July 28, 1950.

1. The Panel on Economic Aspects of Defence Questions considered the suggested statement of principles transmitted in your message under reference. Consensus was that the initiative of the U.S. authorities in this matter should be welcomed.

2. It was our feeling, however, that the needs of the moment could best be met by reaffirming the principles of the Hyde Park Agreement in the present context of mutual defence relations, which would emphasize the continuing nature of co-operation between the two countries in this field. With this in mind, we have drafted comments on each of the paragraphs which reflect the comments made at the Panel meeting which you might take an early opportunity of putting to the State Department as an indication of our thinking of the kind of language that might be incorporated in the statement. It is appreciated that the text set forth in your telegram WA-1623 is a paraphrase of the document on which the U.S. authorities are working and it may be that some of our comments are not entirely on the point. You will notice that we have preferred to speak of co-ordination rather than integration. This is not only in the language of the Hyde Park declaration, but represents better what both of us have in mind and is closer to reality. We have also introduced the conception of the most effective use of the joint resources and the purpose of making a maximum contribution to the common defence effort. We think these are closer to the true goals than the achievements of maximum production.

3. Suggested Preamble

Bearing in mind the high degree of co-operation that has been achieved between the United States and Canada in World War II through the Hyde Park Agreement between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada of April, 1941, and continued in the post-war period through the extension of the Hyde Park principles and through the efforts of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee, it is agreed that in the light of the common problems resulting from the international situation, the principles of the Hyde Park Agreement be reaffirmed and that the efforts toward co-ordination be intensified and accelerated in an effort to ensure the most effective use of the joint resources of the two countries in the common defence.

4. Comments on Itemized Principles

(1) We prefer the original NSRB draft of this paragraph with the word "integrated" replaced by "co-ordinated" and the words "for the purpose of making the maximum contribution to the common defence" added.

(2) We suggest that this paragraph should deal with more than raw materials. Perhaps something of this sort "if and when the need arises, scarce essential materials and supplies will be controlled and allocated to further the purposes of achieving maximum production and of making the maximum contribution to the common defence effort".

(3) For paragraph (3) we prefer the original NSRB draft.

(4) For paragraph (4) we prefer the original NSRB draft.

(5) On the question of the effective date we feel that nothing should be stated in this statement as this will be a matter to be decided by the two governments.

(6) We think the paragraph relating to the U.N. and NAT is a little abrupt and we suggest something that would say that in implementing the above principles due recognition would be given to the obligations of both countries under the United Nations Charter and the North Atlantic Treaty.

(7) We feel also that paragraphs should be included on finance and the removal of barriers which impede the free flow of essential defence supplies.

(8) In immediately following teletype we send you a complete re-draft of the proposed statement of principles as described above. When giving it to the State Department you might say that in re-drafting this statement of principles, we have had the benefit of the NSRB original draft received through J.I.M.C. channels and forwarded to you in a previous message today.

PROPOSED DRAFT STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

Bearing in mind the high degree of co-operation that has been achieved between the United States and Canada in World War II through the Hyde Park Agreement between the President of the United States and the Prime Minister of Canada of April, 1941 and continued in the post-war period, through the extension of the Hyde Park principles and through the efforts of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee, it is agreed that in the light of the common problems resulting from the international situation, the principles of the Hyde Park Agreement be reaf-

Your EX-1217 of August 1st concerning proposed draft statement of principles to be considered at J.I.M.C. meeting August 8th.

1. Copies of your draft were handed to Labouisse of the State Department and Winant of N.S.R.B. yesterday afternoon.

2. From discussions at the State Department at which Satterthwaite and Benninghoff were present, in addition to Labouisse, it became apparent that the proposal has not been considered at a higher level in the State Department and has not been discussed here outside of the State Department and N.S.R.B. Labouisse suggested that consideration at a higher level and discussion with other interested Departments, particularly Treasury, in view of paragraph 6 of your draft, would be desirable before August 8th. I gather from Mr. R.D. MacDonald that Winant is not anxious to have consideration given to the proposals by other United States Government agencies or at higher levels within the State Department until after the August 8th meeting.

3. Winant made no comments when your draft was handed to him. The only comments made by Labouisse were that consideration should be given as to the time when the principle should become effective and as to the desirability of giving publicity to the statement at the time it is approved. Labouisse's first impression appeared to be that the principle should become effective immediately but he obviously had not given any careful consideration to that point.

4. The State Department will, if possible, advise us as to their reaction to the Canadian draft within the next two or three days.

My WA-1664 of August 3rd re statement of principles to be considered at JIMC meeting.

1. The State Department have forwarded to us a further draft statement prepared by NSRB in consultation with State Department officials and have passed on a request from Winant that a copy be handed to Chappell. The text of this draft reads as follows:

Text begins:

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES IN EVENT OF EMERGENCY

The United States and Canada have achieved a high degree of cooperation in the field of industrial mobilization during and since World War II through the operation of the principles embodied in the Hyde Park Agreement of 1941, through the extension of its concepts in the postwar period and more recently through the work of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee. In the interests of mutual security, it is believed that this field of common action should be further extended. It is agreed, therefore, that our two Governments shall cooperate in all respects practicable, and to the extent of their respective executive powers, to the end that the economic efforts of the two countries be joined for the common defence and that the production and resources of both countries be used for the best combined results.

The following principles are established for the purpose of facilitating these objectives:

1. In order to achieve an optimum production of goods essential for the common defense, the two countries shall develop a coordinated program of requirements, production and procurement.

2. To this end, the two countries shall, as it becomes necessary, institute coordinated controls over the distribution of scarce raw materials and supplies.

3. Unite States and Canadian emergency controls shall be mutually consistent in their objectives, and shall be so designed and administered as to achieve comparable effects in each country. To the extent possible, there shall be consultation to this end prior to the institution of any system of controls in either country which affects the other.

4. In order to facilitate essential production, the technical knowledge and productive skills involved in such production within both countries shall, where feasible, be freely exchanged.

5. Barriers which impede the flow between Canada and the United States of goods essential for the common defence effort should be removed as far as possible.

It is the intention of both Governments that the action taken by either of them under this agreement shall be consistent with their other international obligations including those undertaken pursuant to the United Nations Charter and the North Atlantic Treaty. Text ends. Message Ends.

TOP SECRET

Canadian and United States officials have been working since the Joint United States-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee was established in the Spring of 1949 on means, generally, to coordinate industrial defence plans and, specifically, to ensure the free movement of essential supplies between the two countries if war comes.

They had before them on the one hand the example of the high degree of cooperation that was established by the end of the last war, when the border was largely clear of barriers, equal priorities granted by each to the needs of the other and practical measures taken in many fields through the Joint War Production Committee and other joint or combined agencies.

They had before them on the other hand the difficulties of the early days of the last war when there were damaging delays and interruptions in the flow of essential materials due to control orders issued without forethought, without knowledge or without acceptance of the general principle of United States-Canadian cooperation.

The officials recognized the tremendous assistance that the Hyde Park Declaration, together with such statements as the Joint Declaration of December, 1941, were in enabling the United States administration, in particular, to take the actions to make cooperation effective. The Joint Declaration consisted of the approval of the President of the United States and the Canadian War Cabinet of a statement of policy by the Joint War Production Committee of Canada and the United States, calling for "a combined all-out production effort and the removal of any barriers standing in the way of such a combined effort".

They now see the need for a similar statement of principles and the United States members are proposing that the Joint United States-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee agree on a statement of principles to be recommended to both governments for use in the event of an emergency. It is anticipated that this matter will be brought up at the meeting of the Joint Committee here tomorrow.

The United States members will present a statement which we understand has been cleared in principle by the Chairman of the National Security Resources Board, the Chairman of the Munitions Board, and the United States Assistant Under-Secretary of State.

The draft of this statement is attached. (See Telegram WA-1703 of August 4, 1950). It was received over the week end and all the Canadian officials concerned have not had the opportunity of giving it detailed study. This draft has incorporated several suggestions taken from a draft prepared by the Canadian officials on the Panel on the Economic Aspects of Defence Questions. (See copy of attached telegram to Washington, dated August 1, 1950). The Panel based its draft on an earlier proposal of the National Security Resources Board.

I think it would be of benefit to both countries if the Joint United States-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee accepts such a joint statement and recommends it to governments to be given effect by an exchange of notes or by a high level declaration.

If our present information proves to be correct, that the United States draft has indeed been cleared as above, I think we should only suggest such changes as we consider essential, as if substantive changes are made it would reduce the chances of obtaining the necessary clearances from the various United States agencies involved.

If the Joint United States-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee agrees to such a recommendation it may consider the time when such a statement should be issued by both governments. The original conception was that it was to be held for an emergency. We don't know if all the United States agencies think the present situation is such as to warrant the issuing of such a statement.

My view is that the statement should be issued as soon as possible. It is in Canada's interest to have our place assured, in advance, in the United States priority system and control system; it is in our interest to be consulted, where possible, before the United States institutes controls; it is in our interest to have the freest exchange of technical information now, — for we are still having difficulties in some quarters. It is true that we may be able to attain some of these objectives without a statement, but such a statement of principles would give us a most useful general working basis for all measures of cooperation in planning and coordination in industry. It would be hoped that a general statement of principles might offer to industry of both countries the encouragement to prepare their plans in a truly coordinated fashion.

STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES REAFFIRMING THE HYDE PARK AGREEMENT

One further matter you may wish to raise in Cabinet.

The United States is prepared to introduce at tomorrow's Joint United States-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee meeting a financial clause.

We don't know its exact wording, but are told it provides for consultation between the appropriate departments of the respective governments if the arrangements covered by the other principles create foreign exchange difficulties.

I feel we should welcome this clause. The original Hyde Park Declaration was largely concerned with finance, and the omission of any reference to it in a reaffirmation would give rise to speculation that foreign exchange difficulties were no longer of concern to the governments.

JOINT U.S.-CANADA INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION PLANNING COMMITTEE; STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

6. The Minister of Trade and Commerce reported that the Joint U.S.-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee would meet in Ottawa the following day. In an effort to avoid the difficulties which had arisen at the beginning of the last war, and prior to the Hyde Park Declaration, a statement of principles had been prepared at the official level and would be submitted for consideration at the Committee meetings. If accepted, the statement of principles would be recommended to both Governments to be given effect by an exchange of notes. There was some thought that, if and when approval were given by both Governments, the statement might be held for use in an emergency. On the other hand, it might be more advantageous to issue it as soon as possible in order to avoid delays and difficulties in the event of any emergency.

The main features of the statement of principles were:

(a) the development by both countries of a coordinated programme of requirements, production and procurement;

(b) the institution of coordinated controls over the distribution of scarce raw materials and supplies;

(c) United States and Canadian emergency controls to be mutually consistent in their objectives;

(d) free exchange of technical knowledge and productive skills in order to facilitate essential production; and,

(e) removal of barriers impeding the flow between both countries of goods essential to common defence.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum and attached documents, Aug. 7, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 188-50).

7. The Secretary of State for External Affairs noted that the third sentence of the opening paragraph of the draft statement of principles read in part "it is agreed, therefore, that our two Governments shall cooperate ... to the end that the economic efforts of the two countries be joined for the common defence ...". It was felt that the use of these words in the statement of principles might be dangerous and could be interpreted to mean that, in case of an emergency, the economic resources of both countries would be completely integrated. It would seem preferable to re-word this sentence to read somewhat as follows "it is agreed that in the light of the common problems resulting from the international situation, the principles of the Hyde Park Agreement be re-affirmed and that the efforts toward coordination be intensified and accelerated in an effort to ensure the most effective use of the joint resources of the two countries in the common defence".

It was further suggested that the statement might be clarified by insertion of the word "such" at the beginning of paragraph numbered 3.

8. The Cabinet, after further discussion, noted the report of the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the suggestions of the Secretary of State for External Affairs with respect to the statement of principles which would be submitted to the meeting of the Joint U.S.-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee on the following day.

I. JOINT INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION PLANNING COMMITTEE

1. The Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce reported on the meeting of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee which was held in Ottawa on August 8th. He said that the talks had been very successful. The Committee had considered the "Statement of Principles" which had been discussed at the official level in Ottawa and Washington, and had approved them with a few amendments. The members of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee had agreed to recommend the principles to their respective governments and left to those governments the question of timing. Meanwhile, the principles were accepted as the basis for the working of the Committee and its sub-committees. One of the most important results of the meeting was a statement by Mr. Howard that the United States was writing into its industrial mobilization plans provisions to give Canada equitable priority treatment in any system of allocation of controls.

2. It was reported that the U.S. Chairman of the Munitions Board read to the August 8th meeting of the J.I.M.P.C. a list of equipment and components, which was apparently based upon the $25 million Reciprocal Purchasing Programme now under consideration by the U.S. armed services. It was understood that there was no commitment, real or implied, in Mr. Howard's statement. This was an attempt to get together $25 million worth of purchases in accordance with the directive of the Secretary of Defense and did not reflect any change or acceleration of plans resulting from the Korean situation.

3. Mr. MacKay noted that of the $10 billion increased defence appropriations in the United States, approximately $6 billion would be spent on supplies. In addition, the U.S. would probably spend $4 billion for MDAP supplies.

4. The Panel, after further discussion, noted the report of the Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce on the meeting of the Joint Industrial Mobilization Committee held in Ottawa on August 8th.

My dear Colleague:

You are aware that the Joint United States-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee recently agreed on a Statement of Principles dealing in a broad way with the relationship between the two countries in the fields of industry and natural resources in the event of emergency. The Joint Committee further agreed that the Statement of Principles which they have accepted as a guide to joint planning be recommended for adoption to both Governments.

I believe there is general agreement between the two Departments on the Statement of Principles itself, however, there may be varying views as regards the timing of the release of such a Statement.

Attached you will find a draft memorandum to the Cabinet which I am considering putting forward.† Naturally, I would be grateful for any comments you might wish to make on the substance of the memorandum and the question of whether we should now press with the United States State Department for release at the earliest convenient time.

My dear Colleague:

Thank you for your letter of August 25th suggesting release at the earliest convenient time of the Statement of Principles recently recommended by the Joint United States-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee. In general I agree with your proposal and I have no changes to suggest in your draft Memorandum to Cabinet.

I have, however, two suggestions for your consideration. In the first place I think you might want to indicate orally to Cabinet that the Statement of Principles involves Canada in certain responsibilities. I have in mind particularly the responsibility to "institute coordinated controls over the distribution of scarce raw materials and supplies". I fully realize that Canadian industrial mobilization cannot be allowed to get very far out of step with — or at least very far behind — industrial mobilization in the United States; if it did Canadian industry would be denied scarce raw materials and supplies that are brought under Government control in the United States. However, under Principle No. 2, Canada would be accepting explicitly an obligation which otherwise would only remain implicit in the general situation. Once that principle is adopted and made public we are clearly and formally bound to march in step with the United States.

In the second place and in line with what I have just said, I doubt that we should urge the United States to release the Principles until we ourselves are in a position to implement them. We shall not be in a position to "institute coordinated controls" until Parliament has passed an Act providing for such controls. I understand that a Bill is being prepared in your Department.[21] I suggest that no approach should be made to State Department at least until this Bill has been introduced into the House. When it has been introduced I shall be glad to make the approach to State

My dear Colleague,

Thanks for your secret letter of September 1st, regarding release of the Statement of Principles recently recommended by the Joint United States-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee.

I will be glad to indicate orally to Cabinet that the Statement of Principles involves Canada in allocation controls. Legislation covering these controls is now before Parliament and I think that we are, in any event, bound to parallel action of the United States in this direction. I would, however, call your attention to the fact that we are not committed to parallel action of the United States in other than allocation controls.

I agree that we should not approach the State Department of the U.S. until the Bill presently on the Order Paper has been introduced into the House. I do think that an approach to the State Department should be made soon after the Bill has been introduced.[22]

It has been suggested from Washington informally that if the Prime Minister plans to attend the meeting in Washington of the Bar Association, that would form an appropriate occasion for the joint announcement by the President and our Prime Minister. I have not heard whether our Prime Minister intends to go to Washington on that occasion, but perhaps the suggestion is worth keeping in mind.

Yours sincerely,

JOINT U.S.-CANADA INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION PLANNING COMMITTEE; STATEMENT OF PRINCIPLES

12. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, referring to discussion at the meeting of August 7th, 1950, said that all the amendments suggested by Cabinet at the time had been incorporated in the Statement of Principles by the Joint U.S.-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee at meetings held in Ottawa the previous month.

It was recommended that the Statement of Principles be accepted, that the Secretary of State for External Affairs communicate this fact to the U.S. State Department and that the State Department be informed that, in the Canadian Government's view, it would be advantageous to issue the Statement soon.

An explanatory note was circulated.

(a) approved the Statement of Principles recommended by the Joint U.S.-Canada Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee to both the U.S. and Canadian Governments; and,

(b) agreed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs communicate Canada's acceptance of the statement to the U.S. State Department with an indication that in the Canadian Government's opinion it would be advantageous to issue the statement at an early date.

Our EX-1712† — Joint Industrial Mobilization: Statement of Principles.

1. This will confirm that the Canadian authorities are anxious that the statement should be issued as soon as possible, taking advantage of any appropriate occasion such as the proposed visit of Mr. Acheson to Canada.

2. It is important from our point of view that the word "emergency" should disappear and the only place it is used is in the title. We have considered the possibility of referring the question back to JIMC but have decided that this might involve delays. Hence we would propose that the principles should be published either without any title at all, or with some simplified title such as "Principles for Joint Mobilization". We would be glad to consider any suggestion the United States authorities would like to make.

3. We understand that the phrase "in the event of emergency" crept into the title because, on the Canadian side, some of the related documents had been drafted in connection with War Book plans. The word had no special significance even at the time it got into the title of the draft statement. It got in, we gather, from the Canadian side and not the United States side. We hope that the United States authorities will find no difficulty in dropping it.

4. In conclusion, we would like to emphasize that even though the statement has not yet been published we are, of course, deeply interested in all matters pertaining to the establishment and operation of United States controls. Please continue to keep us fully informed.

As it now stands the administration of controls will be mainly under the Departments of Commerce (priorities allocations, steel and other essential materials) Interior (fuels including petroleum) Agriculture (food and food products). Wage and price controls, if applied, will probably be under a separate agency or agencies.

2. Special units will be set up in Commerce, Interior and Agriculture to handle whatever control powers are delegated by the President.

3. In discussions which Chappell has had with N.S.R.B. and the Munitions Board relative to J.I.M.C., the question of controls has been given considerable prominence particularly from the viewpoint of implementation of prior consultation and coordinating controls as expressed in the statement of principles presently being recommended to both Governments through J.I.M.C.

4. Thinking on U.S. side appears to be that J.I.M.C. should have a positive role in prior consultation and coordination of controls. The roles of N.S.R.B. and the Munitions Board in whatever control systems are evolved will remain uncertain until the legislation is approved and the powers delegated.

5. Regardless of the roles of the Boards, both N.S.R.B. and Munitions Board are presently considering a close liaison link with the control operating agencies and they have indicated that they could in turn maintain contact with J.I.M.C. The relation of the Boards to the control agencies in the different departments has not received inter-agency consideration yet and may give rise to considerable difficulties. In the meantime, it therefore seems essential that contact be maintained not only with the Boards through J.I.M.C. but also with the control agencies in the departments.

6. In discussions we have had with Chappell the suggestion has been made that a member of the Embassy staff might be delegated as the central point of contact here on control matters and, in order to provide a continuing J.I.M.C. link, the person designated could be appointed to the Joint Standing Committee of J.I.M.C. (Chappell is the only Canadian member while United States have Winant and Thorp). It will be necessary to discuss this question with the Ambassador when he returns but, inasmuch as the controls in which we shall have the greatest interest will be lodged in the United States Department of Commerce, the office of the Commercial Counsellor here might serve as the appropriate liaison link. We would appreciate any direction and comments on the above suggestions which we think could cover both effective liaison with the control agencies and also keep J.I.M.C. in the picture.

7. As the work in this field increases, it may be necessary to review the position from a staff point of view but, until the shape and extent of the controls are known, the present staff could take on the task.

8. Please pass a copy immediately to Mr. Max Mackenzie.

TELEGRAM WA-2091 Washington, September 11, 1950

1. The President signed the Defense Production Act (Bill H.R. 9176) on Friday evening, September 8th. Copies of the public law will be forwarded as soon as available.

2. On Saturday evening, September 9th, the President addressed the nation by radio and television on the subject of the new law and explained the steps which would be necessary to curb inflation and to build the nation's armed strength.

3. After referring to the fact that the defense budget would double by June 1950 and reach a total of thirty billion dollars, the President dwelt upon the necessity of a greater cooperative effort on the part of the people and he said that harder work and longer hours would be necessary and that the defense effort would cause some civilians hardships in the form of higher taxes and shortage of materials. He pleaded with everyone to cooperate by reducing personal spending and assist in the increased national output. To accomplish these ends, he announced the following programme:

(1) The appointment of Stuart Symington, Chairman of NSRB as Coordinator of the defense production effort;

(2) The passage by Congress at an early date of increased taxes, including excess profit taxes;

(3) The establishment of an economic stabilization agency with a Wage Stabilization Board and a Director of Price Stabilization, with powers to impose mandatory controls, if voluntary agreements prove ineffective;

(4) The issuance of an executive order placing restrictions on instalment buying, details of which will be transmitted to you separately.

(5) An Executive Order requiring business people to retain intact certain price and cost information to be used, if necessary, to impose price ceilings;

(6) An Executive Order delegating to various agencies, as referred to hereunder, powers under the Defense Production Act.

4. The President announced that priorities for defense orders would be imposed immediately, and restrictions on the use of certain critical materials, such as steel, copper and aluminum, would be applied forthwith and he indicated that this would limit the amount of these materials available for use in the production of civilian goods. He also intimated that some form of inventory control to prevent hoarding was impending.

5. He added that it is not certain that the new law permits effective use of selective controls on prices and wages, nor is provision made for adequate rent control. Congress may have to be asked in due course for additional authority to cover these.

6. Prior to his address, the President issued two Executive Orders, the first requiring business people to retain certain price and cost information covering the period May 24th to June 24th, 1950, which may be used subsequently by the Government in establishing price ceilings. Under the second Executive Order, the President delegated to the Secretary of Commerce authority to allocate scarce materials needed in the defense effort; to establish priorities for military orders; and to establish inventory controls to prevent hoarding. Subsequently, the Secretary of Commerce announced the appointment of General W.H. Harrison to be Administrator of the National Production Authority. The President's Executive Order at the same time delegated:

(a) To the Secretary of the Interior, control powers respecting petroleum, gas, solid fuels and electric power;

(b) To the Secretary of Agriculture, powers respecting food and domestic distribution of farm equipment and fertilizers;

(c) To the Inter-State Commerce Commission, powers over domestic transportation, storage and port facilities, excluding air transport or coastal and overseas shipping which remains with the Secretary of Commerce;

(d) To the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, authority to make plant expansion loans, leading to the increased production of needed materials such as aluminum and cooper;

(e) To the General Services Administration, authority to purchase and sell defence materials.

7. The order also established an Economic Stabilization Agency, comprising of Director of Stabilization and a Wage Stabilization Board, to carry out a voluntary stabilization policy.

8. The Federal Reserve System was given authority with respect to real estate and housing credits, while the Secretary of Labour was delegated powers concerning labour supply for both defense and civilian industry.

9. Finally, the Executive Order appoints the Chairman of the National Security Resources Board to coordinate all defense activities of other agencies under the Act, and to lay down policies and programme directives. Copies of these Executive Orders will be sent separately.

10. Will you please pass a copy of this message to Mr. Beaupré immediately.

RESTRICTED

PLANS TO RESIST INFLATIONARY PRESSURES

The congressional struggles of the past two months concerned with stepping up defence preparedness have resulted in an administration outburst of activity during the past few days concerned with the anti-inflationary aspects of the Government's program. The actions taken by the President to contain inflationary tendencies which are being sparked by increased military preparedness are outlined in teletype WA-2091 dated 11th September. This message discusses some of the more important aspects of economic planning included in the President's radio address of 9th September. The full text of this address is carried in the New York Times for Sunday, 10th September.

2. The President emphasized that the Government's program required a departure from a "business-as-usual" philosophy. The economic problem was stated as consisting of the following three parts:

"First. We must produce the materials and equipment needed for defence;

Second. We must raise the money to pay the cost of our increased defence efforts;

Third. We must prevent inflation".

3. In arithmetical terms the current production rate of the economy is approximately $275 billions. Current defence expenditures which are 15 billions per annum are envisaged as reaching an annual minimum rate of 30 billions by the end of the fiscal year on June 30th, 1951. This projection is coupled with the supposition that when defence expenditures get into high gear the annual rate will be well above the total level of 30 billions now in prospect.

4. One notable feature of the President's program is that it endorses in no uncertain terms the doctrine of a pay-as-you-go budget. This is a reversal of the budget deficit concept endorsed by the President during the past two years and sponsored by the Council of Economic Advisers since the departure of its former Chairman, Dr. [Edwin G.] Nourse. This change of direction in the face of protracted and heavy military expenditures coincides with the policy advocated for adoption by Secretary Snyder and by some elements of the Federal Reserve System under more normal conditions.

5. The President placed particular emphasis on the need for increased taxation, and, although he mentioned only the excess profits tax specifically, his remarks indicate that the Administration is planning a new and extensive tax program. At the present time the President's earlier tax program calling for increased taxes of 5 billions per annum is still held up in the house pending a decisive vote on whether or not an excess profits tax section will be added at this sitting. Many legislators who favour the adoption of an excess profits tax are willing to wait several months for its enactment so that a fair and clear tax proposal can be put forward after intensive study.

6. The President gave specific advice to large segments of the economy in the following terms:

"For the consumer, the guiding principle must be: buy only what you really need and cannot do without.

For the business men, the guiding principle must be: do not pile up inventories; hold your prices down.

For wage earners, the guiding principle must be: do not ask for wage increases beyond what is needed to meet the rise in the cost of living.

There is another guiding principle that applies to all of us — consumers, wage earners, farmers and businessmen.

It is this: We should save as much as we can out of the current income."

7. The President's advice to wage earners is considered by some to weaken the fabric of controls. It encourages labour to seek and obtain compensation for every advance of the cost of living. If the determination of the cost of living is confined to basic requirements such as housing and food there could not be too much objection, but critics of this particular section point out that it could be used by labour to offset the President's main contention that increased military preparedness can only be obtained by consumer sacrifices.

8. The President pointed out that "Government controls are needed right now to cut the volume of easy credit buying". The regulations issued by the Federal Reserve System last Friday anticipated the President's remarks on this particular subject by one day. First impressions of the consumer credit regulations are that they are not too stringent and may require tightening up to reduce the rapid rise in the volume of consumer credit than has been present during the last four years.

9. It is evident that the Administration has taken vigorous steps to plan an anti-inflationary program to prevent a further softening of the United States dollar. It remains to be seen whether this effort will result in successful administrative practices which, coupled with public restraint, are pre-requisites for the successful execution of this program.

1. Reference my WA-2091 of September 11th, Defense Production Act.

2. National production authority yesterday issued their first restrictive order under authority of the Act, known as NPA regulation No. 1. This becomes effective today, September 18th. Copies of this are being forwarded by airmail today. Full text appears in today's New York Times.

3. The purpose of the regulation is to prevent the accumulation of excessive inventories of materials in short supply, a list of which is appended. This is to be accomplished by limiting quantities of such materials that can be ordered, received or delivered. The regulation, however, does not apply to the ultimate consumer buying for his own use and not for resale.

4. The basis of the order is the practical minimum working inventory, which is defined as the smallest quantity of material from which a person can reasonably meet his deliveries or supply his services on the basis of his currently scheduled method and rate of operation. Inventories are limited to this basis but provision is made for special considerations and for cases of hardship, such as seasonal buying.

5. Under the regulation, it is prohibited to place multiple orders with different suppliers knowing that the total materials involved is greater than the buyer would be permitted to receive, even though he intends to cancel certain orders before delivery. Likewise, it is an offense for a supplier to deliver material if he has reason to believe that his customer is not permitted to receive it because of his inventory position.

6. With respect to imported materials, a person may import any material acquired before landing without regard to the inventory restrictions. However, if his inventory thereby becomes in excess of the amount permitted, he may not receive further delivery of that material from domestic sources until his inventory position is adjusted.

7. Finally, the regulation requires persons subject to this provision to maintain records of inventories, receipts, deliveries and uses which he normally keeps in the course of his business, and to make such reports to the national production authority as may be required from time to time.

8. The materials affected by regulation No. 1 are:

Portland cement
gypsum board industrial alcohol benzine caustic soda
chlorine glycerine
soda ash lumber, both hardwood and softwood, including box shooks, but excluding railway ties, mine ties and hardwood flooring softwood plywood

Washington, October 2, 1950

Dear Mr. Beaupré:

NPA REGULATION NO. 2 — PRIORITIES

I informed you by telephone on Saturday, September 30, of the intention of the National Production Authority to issue a Priorities Order over the weekend. This Order, entitled Regulation No. 2, was issued today, the effect of which is to give national defense orders first call on the Country's productive resources. The Regulation, copy† of which is attached, becomes effective October 3, 1950.

The Order is a simple form of priority regulation confined to direct defense procurement. While a more elaborate system may well become necessary at a later date, the present Regulation merely assigns defense order priorities without graduation as to essentiality — all D.O. rated orders will have equal preference. The Regulation authorizes the assignment of a defense order rating to any defense order, thus making it mandatory that such defense orders be accepted and filled. A D.O. priority thus issued becomes applicable not only to the prime contractors but to sub-contractors, suppliers of materials, etc., completely down the line. Penalties are provided for evasion.

Defense order (D.O.) ratings are assigned by the National Production Authority or by other agencies so authorized by the National Production Authority. Such priority ratings are, however, applicable only to transactions in the continental United States and its possessions and the question, therefore, arises with respect to certain cases in which the Canadian and the United States defense programmes may be involved. From the wording of Regulation No. 2, it seems that no provision is made, for instance, for the assignment of priority (D.O.) ratings to:

(1) Canadian defense orders placed in the U.S. under

(a) the Military Defense Assistance Act, or

(b) direct with U.S. manufacturers.

(2) U.S. defense orders placed by the U.S. Armed Services either direct with Canadian manufacturers or through the Canadian Commercial Corporation.

This matter, which is obviously of some considerable concern, was discussed at length with Mr. McCoy, the Assistant Administrator for Industry Operations, National Production Authority, and with representatives of the Munitions Board, as a result of which both those agencies are aware of the problem now confronting us. It is understood that the National Production Authority will study the whole matter immediately and will probably issue a further order or amendment extending the operation of priorities to Canadian orders in the above categories. Meanwhile, I have written to Mr. McCoy, setting forth the problem, and a copy of this letter is enclosed.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN H. ENGLISH

Le conseiller commercial de l'ambassade aux États-Unis à l'administrateur adjoint des opérations industrielles du département du Commerce des États-Unis

Commercial Counsellor, Embassy in United States, to Assistant Administrator for Industry Operations, Department of Commerce of United States

Washington, October 2, 1950

Dear Mr. McCoy:

NATIONAL PRODUCTION AUTHORITY REGULATION NO. 2 — PRIORITIES

I should like to refer to our discussion on September 30, respecting the proposed institution of priorities.

The establishment of a broad Priorities System by the National Production Authority, Department of Commerce, will create some immediate and pressing problems in the acquisition of essential materials and equipment for

(a) the Canadian Military Defence Program, and

(b) U.S. Defense orders and contracts placed with Canadian industry.

In a memorandum dated November 17, 1949, for the Secretary of Defense, the Permanent Joint Board on Defense expressed "grave concern in the existing limitations upon the implementation of joint defense measures vital to the security of the North Atlantic American Continent" and recommended the removal "of existing barriers to the effective implementation of vital joint defense measures".

On May 5, 1950,[24] the Secretary of Defense issued a directive to the Secretaries of the three military departments and to the Chairman of the Munitions Board requesting the establishment of a co-ordinated Department of Defense program for reciprocal purchasing of military equipment with Canada. This activity is now well under way and is identified as the U.S.-Canada Reciprocal Procurement Program.

On August 8, 1950,[25] the U.S.-Canada Joint Industrial Mobilization Committee, at its meeting at Ottawa, Canada, established broad principles for facilitating a high degree of co-operation in the field of industrial mobilization.

These have now been approved by the Canadian Government and by the President of the United States.

In order to maintain the continuity of this joint effort, it is submitted that the National Production Authority expand its priorities system to include the requirements of the Canadian Military Defense Program and also to include U.S. orders and contracts placed in Canada for military supplies and equipment.

Priority assistance will be required under the following specific categories:

(a) Canadian defense orders placed with Canadian contractors but requiring some U.S. materials or components.

(b) Canadian defense orders placed in the U.S., under

(i) the Military Defense Assistance Act, or

(ii) direct with U.S. manufacturers.

(c) United States defense orders placed by the U.S. Armed Services through the Canadian Commercial Corporation (the official Canadian Government procurement agency) with Canadian manufacturers.

(d) United States defense orders placed by the U.S. Armed Services direct with Canadian manufacturers.

It is suggested that the mechanics of extending the National Production Authority Priority System should not be too difficult and could roughly follow the World War II arrangements.

Under the delegation of authority for extending and re-allocating priority ratings to the Munitions Board and the Armed Services, the following is suggested:

1. Certification of "eligibility" under categories (a) and (b) above could be presented by authorized representatives of the Canadian Government to the Munitions Board.

2. Certification of "eligibility" under categories (c) and (d) could be provided by the U.S. Armed Services contracting officer.

With special reference to category (b), while it is true that Military Defense Assistance Act procurements enjoy the same priority treatment as purely U.S. Armed Service orders, it is important to establish now that it is in the joint U.S.-Canadian interest that Canadian requirements will continue to enjoy equal priority status with those of the U.S. should any re-rating of Military Defense Assistance Act procurement occur.

In view of the close integration of the rapidly expanding U.S. and Canadian Defense Programs, it is urgently requested that the National Production Authority Priorities System be extended to include both the Canadian Military Defense Program and that portion of the U.S. Defense Program that draws supplies and equipment from Canadian sources.

CONFIDENTIAL Washington, October 20, 1950

Dear Mr. Harvey,

NATIONAL PRODUCTION AUTHORITY

I had an opportunity at lunch today with Mr. McCoy, Assistant Administrator for Industry Operations, National Production Authority, to review the operations, both present and prospective, of the National Production Authority and to attempt a further strengthening of the liaison which we already have with that agency.

Mr. McCoy reiterated his belief in the importance in keeping us well apprised of planning and developments within NPA and he said that the only reason we had not been informed prior to bringing into effect certain orders in the past resulted from the severe pressure under which the agency is working and, particularly, the lack of adequate organization. He hoped to overcome these problems as things progressed.

Mr. McCoy spoke hopefully that there would be a satisfactory outcome of the priority meetings which are to take place next week when Mr. Bull is here. He thought no great difficulty should be experienced in getting agreement for the extension of DO Ratings to Canadian defence orders, providing we find it possible to provide some form of reciprocal arrangement where that seems desirable in Canada.

Several matters of considerable interest and concern developed during the meeting. Mr. McCoy referred to the serious supply position which is developing in the United States, particularly in respect of nickel, aluminum, copper and cobalt. Not only is the stockpile position in each of these unsatisfactory in relation to present requirements but, because of the urgent need for increasing stockpiling, the civilian position is rapidly becoming most unsatisfactory. Serious and urgent consideration is, therefore, being given by the National Production Authority to the imposition at an early date of orders — (a) prohibiting the use of these metals for certain civilian purposes; and (b) the limitation of the use of these metals under a percentage of former use. In view of the extremely difficult position respecting nickel, it seems likely that an order will be issued within a few days, although this is not yet certain. In any event, he informed me that limitation orders concerning all of these metals are expected to be issued by November 1st.

I expressed some concern that orders of this nature covering products of such importance to Canada might be issued without prior advice to us and I explained how difficult and embarrassing this might prove to be, not only for Canada but for the United States as well. Mr. McCoy recognized the situation at once and said he would certainly keep this in mind in the future. Meanwhile, he promised to let me have immediately either copies of the draft limitation orders respecting these metals, or minutes covering them. This, he said, would enable the Canadian authorities to be aware of anticipated American action and, if necessary, to request some delay in bringing into effect such orders in the United States, in order to enable us to take priority action in Canada should this be desirable.

I hope to have copies of the draft orders, or summaries of them, within the next few days, at which time I will, of course, see that they are transmitted to you immediately.

Yours faithfully,
JOHN H. ENGLISH

Following for Denis Harvey, Department of Trade and Commerce, from John H. English, Begins: With reference to my letter of October 19th [20th], the National Production Authority have today provided me with draft copies of proposed orders limiting the use of aluminum and prohibiting certain types of building construction.

2. There are two draft orders respecting aluminum. The first is an "M" order, the purpose of which is to establish rules for placing, accepting and scheduling "do" rated orders. It provides equitable distribution and rated orders amongst all United States producers and fabricators of aluminum. This is similar to steel order M1 in that it sets up a lead time in this case of sixty days for the placing of orders. It also provides for the reservation by primary producers of twenty-five percent of five percent of their ingot production to establish a pool each month sufficient to take care of production of all types of aluminum products on rated orders.

3. The second draft aluminum order will prohibit as from February 1st, 1951, the use of aluminum in the manufacture of a long list of non-essential civilian items, and will between the effective date of the order and January 31st, 1951 limit the use of aluminum in the manufacture of these items to not more than was used for the manufacture of such items during the same period 1949-50. The prohibited list includes some hundreds of civilian items, a full copy of which will be provided if desired.

4. The third is a draft construction order which will restrict construction for the purpose of conserving scarce materials. For this purpose it will prohibit the commencement of construction of any building or structure to be used in connection with a specified list of buildings including amusement parks, nearly all buildings associated with sports, recreation halls, dance halls, theatres and similar enterprises.

The order exempts construction valued at $3,000 or under, maintenance and repair and defence construction.

5. I have not been informed when these orders will be made effective but if you have any comment which you think should be passed on to N.P.A. will you please inform me.

6. I am informed that copies of similar draft orders covering zinc, nickel and copper will be handed to me within the next few days. Ends.

Following for Denis Harvey, Commodities Branch, Department of Trade and Commerce, from R.D. MacDonald, Begins: Have advised Mr. Mackenzie am returning with the Minister Friday evening.

Quoted below draft NPA regulation covering Canadian priority extensions.

If generally acceptable desire return to Washington with draft of Canadian directives designed to extend United States priority ratings in Canada. Minister suggests we devote weekend to the job.

"This regulation is found necessary and appropriate to promote the national defense and is issued pursuant to the authority granted by the Defense Production Act of 1950 and to implement the provisions of the statement of principles for economic cooperation issued by the Governments of the United States and Canada dated October 26th, 1950.

1. What this regulation does. In order that the American defense program may obtain Canadian priorities assistance and the Canadian defense program may have the benefits of the priorities system of the United States, this regulation describes how such action will be integrated.

2. Rated orders from the United States under the United States defense program, placed with Canadian suppliers

(a) If a rated order from a person in the United States, under NPA Reg. 2, is placed with a supplier located in Canada, either directly or through extension, the Canadian supplier may extend the rating received by him in order to acquire materials in the United States in accordance with the provisions of Sec. 11.5, and subject to the restrictions of Sec. 11.6 of NPA Reg. 2.

(b) A person located in Canada extending the rating to a supplier located in the United States, pursuant to this section, shall mark on his purchase order the prefix "do" and the two digit designation appearing on the rated order received by him, and shall affix thereto the additional statement to read as follows: 'certified under NPA reg ...'. such certification shall be signed by him in the manner prescribed in NPA Reg. 2, Sec. 11.8.

(c) If a supplier located in Canada requires priority assistance to obtain materials of Canadian origin to fill a rated order received by him from the United States, application should be made by him to the projects division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Canada for appropriate action.

3. Rated orders from Canada to the United States under the Canadian defense program

(a) The Canadian Commercial Corporation, or any other Canadian Crown Company charged with the responsibility for procurement under the Canadian defense program, or any person located in Canada who has an order in connection with the Canadian defense program calling for delivery of materials to persons located in Canada by persons located in the United States may make application through the Projects Division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Canada, to the National Production Authority, Washington 25, D.C., Ref: Reg _____, for authority to apply to such orders the "do" ratings authorized by NPA Reg. 2. All such orders to which such "do" ratings shall be so applied shall have equal standing to the ratings applied to United States orders under NPA Reg. 2.

(b) All such rated Canadian orders herein above referred to which are placed in the United States pursuant to this section shall bear the prefix "do" and the two digits which may be assigned by NPA as identifying Canadian orders, together with a statement to read as follows: 'Certified under NPA Reg _____'. Such certification shall be signed in the manner prescribed in Section 11.8 of NPA Reg. 2.

4. Certifications by Canadian purchasers to supplier in the United States. Certifications under Sections .2(b) or .3(b) constitute a representation to the supplier in the United States and to the National Production Authority that the person signing such certification is either extending a rating received by him from a purchaser in the United States under the provisions of NPA Reg. 2 or he has been specifically authorized by the National Production Authority under this regulation to apply the rating for the purposes authorized in connection with the Canadian defense program.

5. Specific authorization required. If a person located in Canada received a rated order from a person located in the United States or if he has received a Canadian defense order and cannot fill such order without assistance in obtaining materials from the United States for plant improvement, expansion or construction or obtaining machine tools or other items which he will carry as capital equipment or obtaining maintenance, repair or operating supplies, such Canadian supplier may apply to the Projects Division, Department of Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, Canada for priorities assistance. Such request for assistance will be examined by the Projects Division, and if approved by it, shall be forwarded to National Production Authority, Washington 25 D.C., Ref: NPA Reg. _____ for approval. Ratings for items included in this category may be applied only when specifically authorized for such purposes by the National Production Authority.

6. Applicability of NPA Reg. 2 all of the provisions of NPA Reg. 2 shall apply to all persons affected by the provisions of this regulation except to the extent where such regulations are inconsistent, in which event the provisions of this regulation will prevail." Ends.

"Instructions Regarding Defence Requirements and Priorities

1. The governments of the United States and Canada, in the interests of mutual security and to assist in the discharge of their obligations under the United Nations Charter and the North Atlantic Treaty, have provided for the widest utilization of North American sources of essential military materials and supplies, and have recently agreed on a joint statement of principles for economic co-operation.

2. In accordance with these principles, the military production programs of the two countries must be closely integrated, since manufacturers in both countries are dependent on common sources of materials, supplies and capital equipment. In the United States, to ensure that defence production goals are achieved, the United States government has recently instituted a number of controls, including a formal priority system. In Canada, while standby powers have been taken, it has not been considered necessary to institute a formal priority system. Instead, voluntary arrangements have been and are being made to ensure priority production of Canadian defense orders. Because of the close association between industry in the two countries, and to facilitate the joint development of our military production programs, an agreement has now been reached to provide mutual priority assistance where this is necessary.

3. In order to meet Canada's requirements of essential materials and components from United States sources for defence orders, the United States government will extend the benefit of its formal priority system to Canada. On its part, the Canadian government will extend to U.S. defence orders equal priority assistance to that accorded Canadian defence orders.

4. In order to carry out these arrangements the following procedures will be used:

5. Where suppliers in Canada are undertaking on a voluntary basis the equitable distribution of scarce material and giving precedence to filling Canadian defence orders, it is now essential that such suppliers give equal priority to rated orders originating in the United States.

6. If a supplier located in Canada receives a rated order from the United States and requires priority assistance to obtain from the United States materials to fill that order, he must mark his purchase order on the U.S. supplier with the prefix DO and the two digit designation of the rated order, and affix thereto an additional signed statement reading — "Certified under NPA Reg _____".

7. If a supplier located in Canada has a contract from the Canadian Commercial Corporation, Canadian Arsenals, or N.R.C. on behalf of the Atomic Energy Control Board, for production or delivery of defence supplies and requires priority assistance to obtain materials from the United States to fulfil such contract, he must make an application to the Projects Division, Department of Trade and Commerce, for a rating. If such rating is granted his purchase order on the U.S. supplier is to be completed as prescribed in Paragraph 6. The same priority assistance will be available to sub-contractors, who must apply through their prime contractor.

8. A person who has received a rated order for defence supplies may not extend the rating to get materials for plant improvement, expansion or construction, or to get machine tools or other items which he will carry as capital equipment or to get maintenance, repair or operating supplies.

9. If a supplier located in Canada receives a rated order referred to in Paragraph 6, or has a contract referred to in Paragraph 7, and cannot fill such order or fulfil such contract without assistance in obtaining from the United States (a) materials for plant improvement, expansion or construction, or (b) machine tools or other items of capital equipment, or (c) maintenance, repair or operating supplies, he may make an application to the Projects Division of the Department of Trade and Commerce for a rating, and if such rating is granted his purchase order on the U.S. supplier is to be completed as prescribed in Paragraph 6.

10. If a supplier located in Canada has received a rated order referred to in Paragraph 6, or has a contract referred to in Paragraph 7, and requires priority assistance to obtain materials in Canada to fulfil the order or contract, he may make application to the Projects Division, Department of Trade and Commerce for such assistance."

2. I am sending you by air mail today the original letter to General Harrison, enclosing a copy of these instructions with the thought that you may want to deliver these documents yourself. Ends.

Following for Denis Harvey, Trade and Commerce, from R.D. MacDonald, Begins: At a further meeting at Department of Commerce NPA have stated that they do not wish to extend the same rating numbers to Canadian procurement under the Canadian defence program and wish to identify the Canadian rated orders separately. The following are their reasons which appear valid:

1. The Munitions Board major claimants program classification numbers were used in numbering the NPA DO system.

2. Major claimants program numbers are related to United States military defence appropriations approved for the fiscal year.

3. In addition the armed services have given to NPA a dollar quota figure related to each classification and also related to the military appropriations.

4. The superimposition of Canadian dollar quotas would upset the bookkeeping of United States defence appropriations and dollar quotas given NPA.

5. Canadian United States dollar quotas are to be kept separately and therefore can never become a subject of discussions at political level when United States defence appropriations are approved for the next fiscal year by Congress.

This information was given to Mr. English and he is in position to discuss it in detail. Ends.

CANADA-UNITED STATES EMERGENCY COOPERATION — THE CASE OF ALUMINUM

1. News was received here late last week that United States aluminum interests (especially Reynolds) had persuaded Mr. Symington to issue today (Monday) a statement that the United States authorities were going [to] purchase high-cost American aluminum instead of low-cost aluminum repeatedly offered by Aluminum Company of Canada. This would involve a flagrant breach of the "principles for economic cooperation" confirmed by the two Governments in an exchange of notes less than a fortnight ago.[26]

2. Mr. Howe is particularly concerned. From his conversations in Washington ten days ago he considers that Mr. Sawyer would be more sympathetic to Canadian representations than Mr. Symington. Hence he sent an airmail letter to Mr. Sawyer. It was posted on Saturday. The text follows at the end of this message.

3. This Department has of course no objection to a direct contact such as Mr. Howe is making in this case and it is to be hoped that the matter will cleared up in this way. You should not (repeat not) make any direct contact with State Department on this matter for the time being. However, we should appreciate your advice as to whether such an approach, or any other approach, would be useful under the circumstances.

4. The text of Mr. Howe's letter is as follows:

Text of Letter Begins:

Writing to the Secretary of Commerce as Minister of Trade and Commerce, I wish to place before you certain aspects of our mutual problem of an adequate supply of aluminum for war and civilian purposes.

I am concerned that the course of action reported to be under consideration in the United States may fail in its objective through not making adequate use of the resources of our two countries in that regard.

In accordance with the Principles of Economic Cooperation, recently agreed between our two countries, your officials have been discussing with our representatives a proposed order on the conservation of aluminum, which I understand, will be issued by the National Production Authority. The draft order which I have before me, reads in part as follows:

"Purpose and Scope. The purpose of this order is to conserve the supply of aluminum in the interest of national defense, including the stockpile program, and the maintenance of the essential civilian economy. It curtails the use of this scarce and strategic material in manufacturing and construction..."

Along with this proposal to limit the use of aluminum in manufacturing and construction, we hear of plans to greatly expand basic production capacity in the United States, using energy derived from natural gas and coal. We fully agree with the need for increased productive capacity of aluminum on this Continent, but before you take steps to curtail consumption of aluminum, and more particularly if you are in fact considering an expansion programme, I think you should take into consideration the contribution that Canada is capable of making in supplying this strategic metal.

You will recall the wording of the "Statement of Principles for Economic Cooperation", which reads in part as follows:

"It is agreed, therefore, that our two governments shall cooperate in all respects practicable, and to the extent of their respective executive powers, to the end that the economic efforts of the two countries be coordinated for the common defense and that the production and resources of both countries be used for the best combined results."

In the spirit of that agreement, I draw to your attention the fact that the United States Munitions Board had before it for some months an offer from the Aluminum Company of Canada Limited, to supply an additional 200,000 metric tons of standard aluminum ingot, at a price of 16 1/2¢ U.S. currency per pound, f.o.b. Canadian smelter, with an allowance of actual freight to destination in the U.S.A. not exceeding 1¢ per pound. The deliveries offered were 35,000 metric tons in 1951, 65,000 tons in 1952, and 100,000 tons in 1953. This was to be produced from new hydro electric power and new productive facilities presently under construction. Even though this offer was not accepted, Canada is proceeding to bring this proposed new capacity into production, to fill Canadian and other requirements.

I may say that, in addition to the above, additional capacity can be built in Eastern Canada to produce a further 100,000 metric tons commencing production in two and one-half years.

In addition to the above Canadian offer, which is based on increased production in Eastern Canada, the Canadian industry has for the past two years been engineering a development for hydro electric power and aluminum in British Columbia. This engineering has now been completed, and I am informed that a project can be built that will provide added production of 150,000 metric tons per annum of aluminum after a construction period not exceeding three years, and a total of 500,000 metric tons after five years. The power development contemplated is very favourable, in that the cost of power will be between 1 mill and 1 1/4 mills per kilowatt hour. This indicates that aluminum can be offered to the United States on at least as favourable terms as the offer to the Munitions Board to which I have referred. The proposed power development is remote from industry, and will therefore be used exclusively for producing aluminum.

It seems to me that by looking to Canada, in part at least, for both immediate and more distant help in aluminum production, a much more satisfactory and economical situation can be created than the one now proposed, with the distant possibility that curtailment of the use of aluminum may not be necessary for the present at least.

I may perhaps point out that the Canadian industry has immediately available sources of bauxite and other raw materials, adequate to support the proposed expansion.

I feel that I should bring this situation to your personal attention. I may add the observation that in the light of this situation and again referring to our recent agreement on Principles for Economic Cooperation, I think you will agree that, if you do find it necessary to bring into force an order limiting the use of aluminum in the United States, it could hardly be considered necessary for Canada to institute controls of a similar nature over aluminum in this country.

Your EX-2196 of November 6th, Canada-United States economic co-operation — aluminum.

1. No statement on the use of United States sources of supply has been issued by Mr. Symington, and the Public Relations Officer of N.S.R.B. does not know of any intended statement. There are a number of references to the expansion of United States production in an article by T.E. Mullaney in the New York Times of November 5th.

2. MacDonald has discussed the matter with Winant of N.S.R.B. this afternoon. Winant is not at all unsympathetic to a substantial increase in supplies from Canada and undertook to consult the Department of Commerce and the Munitions Board at once and to prepare a statistical statement covering probable demand and possible sources of supply during the next few years. Mr. Symington is not in Washington at the moment.

3. I think that we should not approach the State Department until we have heard from Winant again. I should also like to discuss the matter with Matthews and English, who are both in Ottawa, and with Bateman, who will be here later this week. If we do approach the State Department, we might make use of the tripartite economic machinery, although this is pretty much in suspense. Matthews might take the issue up with Labouisse (probably without British participation) as a matter falling within the general purposes of the tripartite arrangements and also as one directly involving the application of the "principles for economic co-operation". There is some prospect, however, that without representations to the State Department the matter may be straightened out.

4. If Mr. Howe does not receive a reply to his letter to Mr. Sawyer within a few days, I might see Mr. Sawyer, whom we know to be sympathetic, and enquire about the matter.

Your WA-2879 of November 8. Canada-United States Economic Cooperation — Aluminum. Your teletype has been discussed with Mackenzie who urges strongly that the matter be left entirely between Mr. Howe and Mr. Sawyer for the time being. We have some evidence that Mr. Sawyer seems to have received Mr. Howe's letter.

2. We regret that part of the information given in paragraph 1 of our EX-2196 was incorrect. The statement to be issued last Monday was not specifically concerned with the non-acceptance of Canadian aluminum but was simply in connection with the proposed order restricting uses of aluminum in the United States.

3. The question of accepting Canadian aluminum seems to be one of high politics which is not likely to be settled by statistical statements prepared at lower levels regarding demand and sources of supply. Mackenzie is rather worried that activity at lower levels may actually muddy the waters. The same might be true of any approach through Tripartite economic machinery. We regret the mis-information we have given to you but would be glad if you would take no further initiative without advice from here. We would, however, be grateful to receive your further comments after discussion with Matthews, English and Bateman.

advised, I think they are sufficiently impressed with our arguments that they will take their time before issuing an order and have promised that no order will be issued without further consultation.

3. The Munitions Board disclosed their short-term stockpile objective which was so reasonable that I am sure it will be objected to by N.S.R.B. Toward the end of the meeting there was further discussion regarding a proposed aluminum order. My general impression is that they are so concerned over the possible effect of the proposed aluminum order that they will delay issuing it until they are able to assess the effects of restriction orders already imposed, such as the construction order and restrictions on consumer credit.

Understand this would reserve 35 per cent for DO's and stockpile and limit use for other purposes to 65 percent of amount used during base period of six months ending June 30th, 1950. Difficult to assess effect on Canadian commercial exports to the United States but it presumably would place a ceiling on them and might possibly reduce them from present level. On the other hand proposed order may cause so much trouble here that there is possibility of its being helpful in the larger scheme which we are trying to promote. Have heard nothing to indicate that they will not continue to go slow on issuing a nickel order but it must be remembered that they have a habit of not staying put for very long. Ends.

Following for M.W. Mackenzie, from John H. English, Begins: Further to George Bateman's teletype WA-2920 of November 13th, and to my previous messages, including WA-2743, national production authority yesterday issued order M-7, restricting the use of aluminum. The order, copies of which are being sent under separate cover,† restricts fabricators, as from January 1st, 1951, to 65 per cent of the aluminum consumed by them during the first six months of 1950, but it excludes aluminum used for defence DO orders and consumers using less than one thousand pounds of the metal a year. Aluminum used for maintenance and repairs is also excluded. Between now and January 1st, 1951, consumption is limited to 100 per cent of the same base period of 1950.

2. This cutback of 35 per cent in civilian consumption is expected to cover defence orders and additional stockpiling requirements. In the opinion of Bateman, however, it may have the effect of making a good many fabricating plants uneconomic since their maximum operation, excluding defence orders, will be limited to 65 per cent of the base period, a figure which Bateman thinks will generally be below an economic operating level. It is expected that some plants will close down and it is possible that imports of aluminum from Canada may thereby be adversely affected.

3. Harrison, the Administrator of N.P.A., admitted yesterday that some shutdowns and unemployment in the industry are to be expected as well as price increases, especially in consumer aluminum goods. Aluminum fabricators have already made representations to N.P.A. claiming that the order is far too severe for present circumstances and it is understood labour is concerned over possible layoffs. N.P.A. is, however, adamant at this stage, considering that a substantial reduction in civilian consumption is essential to meet stockpile requirements.

4. Bateman is continuing his talks with agencies in Washington in order to determine the best agency to approach and formally advise on behalf of the Government that we can assure the United States of the potential availability of large supplies of aluminum at a contract price lower than the United States will have to pay its own producers. However, the United States seems determined for political and security reasons to give first preference to increased production within the United States. It is understood that the military is not in favour of any substantial dependence on new production in North-West Canada in particular because of its vulnerability.

5. Bateman feels as a result of his discussions which he proposes to take to a high level within the next few days that even if the United States should be interested in a Canadian contract it would have to be supplemental to increased production in the United States. If the indications are that the Canadian offer will meet an unfavourable reception it may be desirable to place it officially before the State Department and of subsequently letting a rumour leak out that we have made an offer of 150,000 to 500,000 tons a year at a favourable price which if accepted promptly would probably avoid the necessity of the drastic restrictions of the present United States order.

6. Please pass a copy to Mr. Plumptre. Ends.

Following for M.W. Mackenzie, Deputy Minister, Department of Trade and Commerce, from John H. English, Begins: Further to our WA-2935 of November 14th, George Bateman has prepared the following memorandum re the aluminum situation:

2. On November 10th I received telegram from the Minister, asking me to call Powell[28] and authorizing me to put forward in the Minister's name any proposal which Powell was prepared to authorize on behalf of Alcan. I talked with Powell who appeared most anxious that an offer from Alcan put forward by the Government should be a matter of record and he sent MacDowell here to advise me what they were in a position to offer. English, MacDowell and I decided as a first approach that I should discuss matter with men in different agencies whom I knew, tell them what we had in mind and ask their advice as to the best procedure and the best top-level official to approach on a formal basis. It was thought best that I make the informal approaches alone but that on a formal presentation I should be accompanied by English. On Monday and Tuesday I saw Wynant and Shannon of N.S.R.B., Colonel Miergard of Munitions Board and Gumbels of G.S.A. In each case I reviewed the supply and requirements picture, said that to discharge our obligations under the principles of economic cooperation we considered it desirable that the Government inform the United States of the contribution which we were able to make and stated that within three years we could bring in 150,000 tons a year in the west, and additional 100,000 tons in the east and within five years a further 350,000 tons in the west, that the United States could take all or part of 500,000 tons a year for five years starting 1954 at a price lower than the United States domestic price with a twenty-year call on the facilities to produce the annual tonnage for which they might now contract.

3. MacDowell remained in Washington until Tuesday afternoon and was kept fully advised.

4. None of the men were optimistic about outcome but Shannon and Wynant promised to explore situation and advise me. On Wednesday morning they suggested my seeing Larsen. Before making appointment with Larsen I phoned MacDowell in New York, about 11.30, asking him to give me more specific price which I could use and also if they would be prepared as an alternative to offer a substantial tonnage over the next five years. He seemed pleased with the idea and the progress and said he would have details before 3.00 p.m. He phoned at that time to say they had changed their minds and did not want to proceed further with the matter or to make any offer of any kind. In view of this attitude and of the unfavourable Washington atmosphere regarding Canadian aluminum and of the probability that as a result of the aluminum restriction order the N.P.A. will be deluged with complaints I am taking no further action and am returning to Montreal today. Meanwhile, you may have seen the press release by the Aluminum Company of Canada which appears on page 43 of the New York Times today which can hardly be said to improve our position in the United States. 2. The purpose of the order is to ensure equitable distribution of available nickel after provision for rated orders and stockpiling requirements, and provides that no person shall consume in manufacturing process or construction during the first quarter of 1951 a quantity of nickel by weight in excess of 65 percent of his average quarterly consumption during the base period January 1st to June 30th, 1950, provided, however, his consumption in any one month shall not exceed 40 percent of the permitted use during the quarter.

DESPATCH 3093 Washington, December 2, 1950

GOVERNMENT PURCHASES OF ALUMINUM

I am enclosing two copies† of a column by Marquis Childs that appeared in the Washington Post on December 1 concerning the decision of the National Security Resources Board to purchase additional supplies of aluminum from United States producers rather than from the Aluminum Company of Canada.

2. This article is of particular interest since it sets out the historical background of the decision taken by Mr. Symington. It points out that Mr. Symington, as Surplus Property Administrator, when disposing of Government-owned aluminum plants in 1945 decided to strengthen the position of the minor producers rather than to turn over these plants to the Aluminum Company of America. Mr. Childs suggests that the decision to increase the relative status of the independent producers rather than to increase one of the world's greatest producers, the Aluminum Company of Canada, which also had at least some form of association with the Aluminum Company of America, was an important factor in Mr. Symington's decision.

3. It is probable that the general line taken by Mr. Childs will also be taken by many United States Government officials.

PREPARATIONS FOR FULL ECONOMIC AND INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION OF THE UNITED STATES

1. An appeal made yesterday by [Alan] Valentine, Head of the Economic Stabilization Agency, to automobile companies to suspend price advances until his agency could examine "the entire question of prices" brought to a head rumours which have been circulating in Washington the last few days that the Administration was contemplating the imposition of "full controls" and that the President was about to declare a state of national emergency and to institute "full industrial and economic mobilization". As a result, Stephen Early, acting White House press secretary, and William Harrison, Administrator of the National Production Authority, denied these rumours. Early, however, in a press statement, admitted that there had been general talks within the administration on all-out economic and industrial mobilization and emergency Executive orders.

2. This is the first public intimation that plans are being prepared for a changeover from a state of partial mobilization to full mobilization on the economic and industrial front.

3. In some preliminary comment from a reliable White House source, we were told that plans were in the course of preparation for far more intensive economic and industrial mobilization in this country. This would not, we were told, involve full military mobilization, but would be directed to moving the country into a state of fuller industrial and economic preparedness in the event of further deterioration of the international situation.

4. The planning apparently involves, at this stage, a consideration of:

(a) A declaration of national emergency;

(b) The issuance of further executive orders under the Defence Production Act;

(c) The imposition of allocations on exports of raw materials;

(d) The imposition of end item controls;

(e) The preparation of the necessary organization to implement price and wage controls and allocation orders.

5. No decisions, we were told, had yet been reached and the discussions were essentially in an advanced planning stage. It was also emphasized that no new legislation appeared to be required to take the steps now contemplated by the Administration for this purpose. The state of national emergency declared with Congressional sanction at the time of Pearl Harbour still exists; however, a new declaration of national emergency may be made for psychological reasons. The Defence Production Act passed this summer provides the necessary legislative authority for the issuance of emergency executive orders. What appears to be now mainly involved is that wage and price controls will have to be imposed and the necessary machinery established.

6. There is as yet no firm indication of when these decisions will be taken. We were given to understand, however, that an announcement from the President putting the emergency machinery in motion, together with the issuance of the executive orders, might come before the end of the year. Early, questioned on this point, is reported to have said: "You can't just get a piece of paper and write 'national emergency' upon it. There must be preparation, you must have agencies and offices to carry out the Executive orders." The prospect is that the new controls will come into effect early in 1951.

Reference my WA-3193. Preparations for full economic and industrial mobilization of the United States.

1. We have learned from a reliable White House source that the President is planning to make an important statement — probably next Wednesday night — which will be broadcast to the country. No information is being divulged about its content as this statement is at present in the course of preparation, but we were told that it would include "a dramatic announcement" pertaining to the United States defence production effort. It would also contain a report to the country on the seriousness of the present situation resulting from Chinese Communist intervention and an indication of what steps the administration proposes to take to meet the situation.

2. We learned also that Presidential assistants such as John Steelman and Charles Murphy who have been working on the draft of the statement have been required by the President to have the text ready by Tuesday afternoon and that the President will consult Congressional leaders on his message on Wednesday morning. The time of the broadcast has not yet been set.

3. Speculation in the newspapers that the President may declare a state of national emergency this week was stimulated by a remark made by General Marshall on Saturday upon leaving a closed meeting of the Senate Appropriations Committee which was holding hearings on defence appropriations, to the effect that President Truman "was seriously considering" the declaration of a state of national emergency. Several senators who attended this closed session, moreover, expressed their own convictions that such a proclamation should be issued as soon as possible in order to draw the public's attention more forcibly to the present dangers and to lay the ground for fuller mobilization of industrial and manpower resources. In particular, Senators Elmer Thomas (Dem.) [Oklahoma], [John L.] McClellan (Dem.) [Arkansas] and [B.R.] Maybank (Dem.) [South Carolina] all permitted direct quotations in support of a declaration of national emergency.

4. From the private indications available to us, as well as from newspaper speculation, it would appear that the President's statement may well include the declaration of a state of national emergency and a reference to measures required to step up as quickly as possible the state of national preparedness, with particular reference to the defence production programme.

5. Unofficially, according to newspaper comment, it is thought that the declaration would revive such powers as ending leases on war plants and other properties and waiving regulations requiring the advertising of bids for Government contracts, thus permitting contracts to be let by negotiation. It would permit the Interstate Commerce Commission to assign priorities on transportation facilities, authorize the arming of merchant vessels and waive mandatory retirement of military officers and the limits now imposed upon the promotion and appointment of senior military officers. Particularly, also, it is expected that the declaration would have an important psychological effect in stepping up the planning activities of the Government and would attract the personnel from private industry necessary to operate the control and production machinery under an accelerated defence production programme. There is also some talk of plans for creating a new defence production organization — a sort of streamlined war production board — which would exercise greater authority than the NSRB in implementing the defence production programme.

6. I shall report any further information on the President's statement as it becomes available to us. The Washington Post, in reporting Washington rumours, relating to the expected Presidential announcement quotes a "Government informant" as saying that "I think this is going to be a very important week".

1. Naturally we shall be extremely interested to learn what the United States intends to do to increase the pace of its mobilization. Like everyone else, we may have to wait until the President has spoken to see what the United States latest intentions are.

2. If it is at all possible, we would, however, appreciate receiving a copy of the text of the President's address as much in advance of delivery as it is possible for you to arrange. According to today's papers this address is now set for Friday night. The third principle of the Statement of Principles for Economic Co-operation reads: "Such United States and Canadian emergency controls shall be mutually consistent in their objectives, and shall be so designed and administered as to achieve comparable effects in each country. To the extent possible, there shall be consultation to this end prior to the institution of any system of controls in either country which affects the other." In the light of this commitment, for whatever it is worth, U.S. officials may be willing to provide you with the text of whatever the President is going to say well in advance of delivery.

Your EX-2561 of December 13th. Measures of further mobilization in the United States.

1. I have spoken to Perkins at the State Department about providing us with advance information on the contents of the President's address tomorrow night. He said that he had gone over the 8th draft of the speech this morning and expected there would be several more drafts before the text became final. He thought, however, that it should be possible to provide us with an outline of the chief decisions which will be announced in the speech even though the final text might not be ready far enough in advance to be of any use. He instructed a member of his staff to go into this at once.

2. I told him that since, under the statement of principles for economic co-operation, we would be expected to take more or less parallel action in setting up controls, the Government would be receiving inquiries immediately after the President's announcement. Foreknowledge of the main decisions were therefore almost necessary if these inquiries were to be handled effectively. He fully appreciated this point. I hope that by tomorrow morning at latest we may be able to send further information.

Reference my WA-3261 of December 14th, contents of President's speech this evening.

1. Perkins tells me that the speech is still undergoing revision this morning. It will include a passage to the effect that price controls and measures of wage stabilization will be adopted. This reference will be in general terms and will be accompanied by a further appeal for voluntary co-operation. Price controls will be applied selectively as the need arises, and it is hoped that complete control will prove to be unnecessary and that the area of compulsion can be limited with respect both to prices and wages.

2. From another source we learn that the content of the speech has changed in important respects since the President began a series of consultations with Congressional leaders and executive agencies early this week. The changes from the first drafts have related particularly to the question of wage and price controls. A final consultation with Congressional leaders is taking place this morning.

3. It was intended that he should announce in the speech the appointment of Mr. C.E. Wilson to head the economic mobilization effort, but this has become public this morning. Mr. Wilson agreed to accept the post only on condition that he would be directly responsible to the President and would in effect be both the Co-ordinator and the Director of the whole programme. He will thus assume the co-ordinating functions previously assigned to Mr. Symington, and in this roll will play much the same part as Mr. Byrnes[29] did in the latter part of the last war. What part is to be played by Mr. Symington and N.S.R.B. remains obscure for the present.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH THIS EVENING[30]

As of half past five we were informed by the White House that the President was still working on the text of his broadcast and that it would not be available for at least another hour and a half. As the President will be speaking at 10:30, I take it that there is now no particular purpose in trying to get the text in advance of delivery. I shall of course send you copies by bag for purposes of reference.

2. The White House source elaborated a little on the information which I gave you in my message WA-3264 this morning. He said that the references to wage and price controls will be in general terms. However, what is envisaged is the imposition of immediate and mandatory controls in selected fields and a request for voluntary cooperation for the observation of fair standards for the time being in prices and wages generally. The President will also indicate that mandatory controls will be extended. This, it was explained, will serve as a stick to help bring a greater amount of voluntary cooperation in keeping prices and wages down at present levels; it will also put the public on notice that mandatory controls are envisaged and will be instituted as and when the necessary administrative machinery is built up.

3. Mr. C.E. Wilson is to have the title of Director of Defence Mobilization.

trator for Industry Operations, N.P.A., I was given the following confidential information on N.P.A. planning.

1. Consideration is currently being given to the early imposition of a wide range of end use restrictions for copper, tin and aluminum. Copper restriction is likely to be severe and include such items as copper tubing and flashing for housing.

2. No end use restrictions are contemplated for zinc or nickel at present but nickel in particular may be made subject to direct allocation.

3. Cobalt and cadmium are to be treated in much the same way as columbium and made subject to directive or allocation.

4. A controlled materials plan is under active consideration but unlikely to be effective until third quarter of 1951. Meanwhile it seems probable plate and steel sheet will be put under allocation by second quarter.

5. Horizontal domestic cut back in sulphur of 20-25 per cent is almost certain while European consumers are being urged to reactivate production from pyrites.

6. Construction, no decision has yet been taken but it is expected pressure will break in connection with plant construction required for extension of United States aluminum industry. At that time DO system may well be extended to cover construction. Meanwhile certain essential defense construction is being handled by directives, as for example, with synthetic rubber.

7. Steps are being taken to encourage Tungsten production in United States by contracts with small domestic producers. United States may be interested in reopening of Canadian property and this should be looked into with a view to a United States contract.

8. Mandatory reductions of from 10 to 15 per cent in automobile production is expected in first quarter. Ends.

ECONOMIC AND INDUSTRIAL MOBILIZATION OF THE UNITED STATES

1. The President's broadcast Friday night was followed on Saturday by:

(a) The proclamation of the existence of a national emergency;

(b) The release from the White House of a long list of laws carrying extraordinary powers which automatically become effective upon signing of the declaration;

(c) The issuance of an executive order by the President establishing the Office of Defence Mobilization under Charles E. Wilson.

2. The texts of the proclamation, the release on the extraordinary powers and the Executive Order were printed in full on page 30 of the Sunday edition of the New York Times.

3. Under the Executive Order, the President has given Mr. Wilson unprecedented powers to direct the mobilization of this country. These powers are defined as follows: "The Director shall, on behalf of the President, direct, control and coordinate all mobilization activities of the Executive Branch of the Government, including but not limited to production, procurement, manpower, stabilization, and transport activities". This centralization of responsibility and authority goes beyond any powers granted during World War II.

4. A preliminary discussion on the relationship of these decisions of the United States Government to the statement of principles for economic cooperation to which you referred in your message EX-2561 of December 13th took place between Benninghoff and Ignatieff on Saturday.

5. As a result of a preliminary talk with the Embassy, Benninghoff had accompanied Stanley Woodward to the White House to have a talk with Charles Murphy, an Administrative Assistant to the President, about Canada-United States problems arising out of the declaration of a national emergency in the United States as well as on the St. Lawrence and the B.C. Alaska railway proposal on which I am reporting separately. Murphy had arranged for Benninghoff to see Valentine, Director of the Office of Economic Stabilization.

6. Following his talks with Murphy and Valentine, Benninghoff told Ignatieff that it would take some weeks before the extent of authority to be exercised by Wilson as well as the mobilization machinery will be clarified. The present picture, he admitted, was one of confusion, but bearing in mind Mr. Wilson's wide experience in this field during World War II, many far-reaching decisions could be expected within the next few weeks.

7. Benninghoff's talk with Valentine, he said, had been quite useful. Valentine was quick to realize the implications of the statement of principles with regard to his agency's activities. In this connection, the Commercial Counsellor's Office has been in close liaison with the Office of Price Stabilization in ESA since the 20th of November, and copies of its reports of trade and commerce on ESA have been forwarded to you. Valentine's suggestion that the establishment of some continuing machinery of consultation in Washington to coordinate economic stabilization and control measures between the two countries is to be welcomed in this connection. The question of a permanent Canadian liaison official attached to ESA as and when such became necessary had already been discussed with Mr. Phelps, the Deputy Director of Price Stabilization, with whom [G.A.] Browne is now holding twice-weekly talks. Valentine also spoke with admiration of the operations of Canada's WPTB during the last war and said that he was meeting with McCutcheon in New York on Monday to get from him at first hand a picture of the wartime operations of our Board. He said that he had hoped to have seen Mr. Donald Gordon as well but found that he was not available. Mr. Valentine also spoke with great admiration of Mr. Pearson who had been his contemporary at Oxford.

8. As regards defence production liaison, Benninghoff suggested that, for the present at least, liaison should be continued through General Harrison's office. He added the comment, however, that the flexibility which at present exists in the defence mobilization arrangements of the United States will gradually disappear in the course of the next three or four weeks as the Office of Defence Mobilization gets to work on the process of reorganization of the defence effort. He therefore suggested that it would be very desirable to establish continuing liaison with this office as soon as possible in order that Canadian interests should be constantly kept in mind as decisions are taken by this powerful body. He also expressed the opinion that the Canadian Government might find it useful to consider establishing a permanent office of liaison with the Office of Defence Mobilization to take effect within say a period of three or four weeks.

Your WA-3303 of December 19 — economic and industrial mobilization of the United States.

In the last paragraph of your message you mention Benninghoff's suggestion that the Canadian Government might wish to establish a permanent liaison office with the Office of Defence Mobilization. We asked the Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce for his comments on this suggestion.

2. Mr. Mackenzie commented as follows:

"Naturally we welcome the suggestion of the American authorities that we establish close liaison with the Economic Stabilization Agency and with the Office of Defence Mobilization and I am certain that we will wish to take advantage of these suggestions.

From the teletype it is apparent that the American position is still in a state of flux and that they have been able to make little progress with their actual organization. As a matter of fact, we find ourselves in much the same position. We have already given consideration to increasing our staff in Washington which of course brings up the problem of space. Nevertheless as is mentioned in the teletype, Mr. Browne, our Commercial Secretary has already established useful liaison with the Office of Price Stabilization in ESA and I am advised by Mr. English that steps have already been taken to make contact with Mr. Wilson's office as soon as he is prepared to enter into discussions with our people. I have asked Mr. English to come up to Ottawa during the first or second week of January so that we might have full discussions on these and allied problems and I would hope at that time that we might arrive at some decisions which we could communicate to the Americans, and, in the meantime, I presume that the Commercial Counsellor's Office will be recognized as the normal point of contact until more permanent arrangements are made."

U.S. BASES IN NEWFOUNDLAND
SUMMARY OF RECOMMENDATIONS BY THE P.J.B.D.

The formal request to the United States for modification of the Bases Agreement with respect to Newfoundland bases proposed that the rights enjoyed by the U.S. there should be brought as nearly as possible into line with the joint defence statement issued by the two Governments on February 12, 1947.[31] In particular, the request to the U.S. referred to income tax exemptions, customs and excise tax exemptions, postal privileges, and jurisdictional rights enjoyed by the U.S. under the Bases Agreement. On the proposal of the U.S. authorities, the Canadian Government's request was referred to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence which held meetings thereon in January and March, 1950. Following is a brief summary of the recommendations of the Board (a fuller account is given in the attached memorandum):

1. Income Taxes: Since the Canadian Government's request was made to the U.S., a draft convention covering the avoidance of double taxation has been agreed to by officials of both Governments and will, when it becomes effective, accord certain privileges to U.S. Service personnel in Canada now granted under the Bases Agreement. The Board recommends that the U.S. waive exemptions on contractors' profits, U.S. civilian employees and their wives and minor children.

Comment: This will place income tax exemptions of U.S. personnel in Newfoundland on the same basis as in the rest of Canada.

2. Customs and Excise: The U.S. to waive exemptions on contractor-owned equipment, personal belongings and household effects of contractors and their U.S.

employees other than on first arrival, and tax exemption rights on individual purchases in Canada by U.S. personnel.

Customs and excise exemptions for Post Exchanges and Service clubs to continue, it being understood that the U.S. authorities will endeavour to increase purchases for these institutions in Canada and will take special steps to prevent abuse of privileges.

Comment: With the exception of privileges for PX's and Service clubs, this recommendation in effect meets the Canadian Government's request.

3. Postal Privileges: Withdrawal of the Canadian Government's request for the removal of Army postal facilities in Newfoundland bases, it being understood that the U.S. will not establish normal civilian postal offices and will limit the use of the APO[32] system strictly to mail destined to U.S. territory or to other U.S. APO's.

4. Jurisdiction:

(i) The U.S. to waive all rights of jurisdiction permitted under the Bases Agreement over British subjects and aliens other than U.S. personnel;

(ii) The U.S. to suspend for five years exercise of rights of jurisdiction over U.S. civilian personnel, subject to revival on notice thereafter or in event of war or other emergency;

(iii) The Canadian Government to seek to amend the Visiting Forces Act to permit of compulsory attendance of witnesses;

(iv) The Canadian Government to seek legislation to protect security interests of the U.S. forces in Canada, as required under the Bases Agreement.

Comment: The Board's recommendation will permit of the extension of the Visiting Forces Act as revised to Newfoundland and will remove probably the most objectionable feature of the Bases Agreement, namely, the right of jurisdiction by U.S. courts over Canadian citizens. Revival of the rights of jurisdiction by U.S. Service courts over "followers of the camp" who are U.S. citizens can probably be met when the time comes, if ever.

5. Goose Bay: Since the present status of U.S. forces at Goose Bay is very anomalous and since the U.S. forces appear to desire permanent construction there for housing and other facilities which is apparently precluded under their Treasury regulations unless there is reasonable security of tenure, the Board recommends that the U.S. be given a twenty-year lease (with the option of renewal) to an area in the Base on which they can make the necessary construction, the U.S. forces to enjoy substantially the same privileges as in its Newfoundland bases, the administration and control of the base to remain under the RCAF.

[32] Army Post Office.

6. Other Matters: The attached memorandum outlines other matters in which the U.S. is prepared to, or may, accommodate us.[33]

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet Defence Committee

SECRET [Ottawa], April 20, 1950

UNITED STATES NEWFOUNDLAND BASES
RECOMMENDATION OF THE PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE

There is given below an explanation of the Board's Recommendation which appears on pages 12-14 of the P.J.B.D. Minutes of March 28-30, 1950:†

Income Tax

The Canadian-U.S. Double Taxation Convention of 1942 exempts, on a reciprocal basis, U.S. Service and civilian personnel in Canada of the U.S. Government from Canadian taxation on remuneration paid by that Government.

Under the P.J.B.D. Recommendation, as already agreed by the taxation authorities of the two countries, this exemption would be extended to cover, on a reciprocal basis, U.S. Service and civilian personnel in Canada of the U.S. Government and their wives and minor children, with respect to all their income derived from outside Canada. These persons enjoy such an exemption at present under Article XVII of the Newfoundland Bases Agreement.[34]

Also, the income tax provisions of the Bases Agreement would be cancelled and U.S. civilian employees of contractors at the bases, their wives and minor children and contractors ordinarily resident in the U.S. (in respect of their profits from work at the bases) would lose the exemption from Canadian taxation accorded by the Bases Agreement. The foregoing would meet in full the Canadian request for modification of the income tax provisions of the Bases Agreement.

Customs/Excise

The P.J.B.D. Recommendation envisages:

[33] Le 25 avril 1950, le Comité du Cabinet sur la défense a approuvé les grandes lignes des recommandations de la Commission permanente canado-américaine de défense sur l'accord des bases à Terre-Neuve. Le gouvernement a décidé de reporter son examen final des recommandations jusqu'à ce qu'il sache mieux quelle loi serait nécessaire.
On April 25, 1950, the Cabinet Defence Committee endorsed in general terms the P.J.B.D.'s recommendations on the Newfoundland Bases Agreement. The government decided to withhold final consideration of the recommendations until it had a better idea of the legislation that would be required.

(1) Cancellation of the customs/excise exemptions accorded to contractor-owned equipment under Article XIV.

(2) Cancellation of any customs/excise exemptions accorded by Article XIV to personal belongings and household effects of contractors and their U.S. employees (after first arrival), and to purchases in Canada, outside the leased areas, by individual U.S. military and civilian personnel, or their families.

(3) Continuation of customs/excise-free PX's and canteens, for reasons of morale and as a high proportion of supplies for such institutions will be procured in Canada and special steps (e.g., cigarette rationing) are being taken to prevent abuse.

With the exception of the PX's, this portion of the Recommendation meets the original Canadian request.

Post Offices

For a variety of technical and morale reasons, the U.S. Service post offices at the Newfoundland bases (Article XVI permits normal U.S. post offices) would be retained on the understanding that (a) they will henceforth be used only for the purposes authorized by Article XVI (i.e., mail to post offices in U.S. territory and to U.S. Service post offices), and (b) date stamps used at the bases will (as at present) only show the Service post office number — not the location of the office.

Originally, Canada asked for replacement of military postal facilities by Canadian post offices. It appears clear that no U.S. civilian post offices will be established. As a result of (a) above, some increase in present Canadian postal facilities at the bases may prove necessary. Washington would be agreeable to Canadian Service postal facilities being established in the U.S. in an emergency.

Jurisdiction

The P.J.B.D. Recommendation envisages the following:

(1) Waiver for all time of U.S. rights of jurisdiction, under Article IV, over Canadian citizens, other British subjects and aliens who are not U.S. citizens connected with the bases.

(2) Suspension for five years, and thereafter subject to revival on six months notice, or in the event of war or other emergency, of U.S. rights of jurisdiction over U.S. civilians.

(3) Before extending the Visiting Forces Act to the Province of Newfoundland, Canada to make administrative arrangements with Newfoundland — similar to those with the other provinces — under which Canadian courts do not normally exercise jurisdiction over U.S. Service personnel, particularly in cases in which Canadian persons or properly are not affected.

(4) The Canadian Government to seek amendment of the Visiting Forces Act to provide for the compulsory attendance of witnesses before U.S. Service courts in Canada.

(5) The Canadian Government to seek legislation penalizing offences against the security of U.S. forces in Canada committed in Canada by any person other than U.S. Service personnel.

The jurisdiction portion of the Recommendation gives Canada substantially what it sought originally. The P.J.B.D. Journal makes it clear that it is desired that the U.S. seek reciprocal security legislation. As a result of Article V of the Bases Agreement, Canada is, in any case, under obligation to seek necessary legislation to ensure the security of U.S. operations in Newfoundland. (Further comment on the jurisdiction question is made in the attached paper).

Legislation to Implement Recommendation

Legislation will be required to implement the revised Double Taxation Convention referred to in the Recommendation. No legislation would appear to be required to cover the customs/excise privileges that would remain to the U.S. under the Recommendation since the customs/excise privileges accorded by the Bases Agreement were protected by recent legislation which authorized their continuation by regulations of the Governor-in-Council. It at present appears probable that continuation of U.S. Service post offices at the bases would not require new legislation. The question of the legislation that would be required to implement the jurisdiction portion of the Recommendation is dealt with in the attached paper.

OTHER RELEVANT RECOMMENDATIONS

Goose Bay

While the U.S. has been given no express undertaking permitting continued use of Goose for a specific period, U.S. forces have been there since 1941 and have not been asked to move out. In practice, the U.S. forces enjoy the same privileges as at the leased bases, although there appears to be no express legal authority for this except with respect to customs (the Newfoundland Government agreed to grant customs privileges as under the Bases Agreement up to the signature of a peace treaty with Germany). On the other hand, Article XIX of the Bases Agreement provides that "U.S. forces stationed or operating outside the Leased Areas under separate agreement ... shall be entitled to the same rights and enjoy the same status as U.S. forces stationed within the Leased Areas." Although neither the Canadian nor the Newfoundland Government appears to have admitted that this Article applies to Goose, although the U.S. has not formally argued that it does apply, and although there is no formal agreement permitting use of Goose for a specific period, the U.S. would obviously have some grounds for arguing that, in the absence of a clear declaration to the contrary, the Article does apply to Goose.

This situation is clearly unsatisfactory to both parties. Continuance of the U.S. forces at Goose without any agreement as to cut-off date and other matters will tend to create a vested interest there. Enjoyment of the privileges of the Bases Agreement without protest on our part tends to create a presumption that the Bases Agreement applies in this respect. From the U.S. point of view, uncertainty of tenure restricts U.S. expenditure there on permanent-type construction that is needed, and especially housing, since a U.S. Treasury ruling apparently precludes expenditure on new construction unless there is reasonable security of tenure.

With a view to clearing up the U.S. position at Goose and, in the expectation that an offer of a reasonable settlement regarding Goose might be some inducement to the U.S. Section to modify its previous firm stand against any modification of the jurisdictional provisions of the Bases Agreement, the Canadian Section, after discussion with Mr. Pearson, Mr. Claxton and Mr. Bradley,[35] indicated at the last meeting of the Board that, provided a mutually satisfactory solution of the leased bases issue could be found, it would be prepared to recommend to the Canadian government a lease arrangement for a portion of Goose Air Base along the following lines:

(1) A lease to the U.S. for a period of twenty years, with an option for renewal, of a portion of the present base area large enough to accommodate U.S. military installations and housing;

(2) Continuation of customs/excise and postal privileges comparable to those enjoyed at U.S. Newfoundland bases;

(3) Jurisdiction at Goose to be covered by the Visiting Forces (USA) Act;

(4) The base to remain under the overall command and administrative control of the R.C.A.F.;

(5) All proposed U.S. construction to have the prior approval of the C.O., R.C.A.F. Station, Goose Bay;

(6) All proposed U.S. Service projects in Canada based in the U.S. area to have the prior approval of the Canadian Government.

The U.S. Section agreed to refer the proposal about Goose to the U.S. authorities with the suggestion that the two Air Forces explore it and make recommendations to the two Governments for a satisfactory agreement.

There would appear to be no doubt that the proposals about Goose were regarded by the U.S. Section as an important quid pro quo in return for concessions on jurisdiction.

U.S. Activities Outside the Leased Bases

At the P.J.B.D. meeting the U.S. Section undertook, at the request of the Canadian Section, to recommend that the Canadian Government be consulted regarding any U.S. Service activities of significance that it is proposed to conduct outside the island bases — in line with the principle that all such activities should be under the control of the Canadian Government.

Collection of Income Taxes

At the P.J.B.D. meeting, the U.S. Section agreed to take up with its Government the possibility of the U.S. authorities in Newfoundland making tax deductions at the source and providing payroll information with respect to employees taxable in Canada.

U.S. Contribution to Newfoundland Roads

While being exempt from registration and license fees and the gasoline tax, the U.S. operates twenty per cent of the motor vehicles in Newfoundland and the heavier vehicles are hard on the roads. At the P.J.B.D. meeting, at the request of the Newfoundland Attorney General who was present, the U.S. Section agreed to take up with its Government the possibility of its contributing, in some form or other, a reasonable share of the cost of road maintenance in Newfoundland. Contributions, if any, will probably be in kind rather than cash.

[35] F. Gordon Bradley, secrétaire d'État.
F. Gordon Bradley, Secretary of State.

Unemployment Insurance at the Leased Bases

At the request of the Canadian Embassy, Washington has arranged for contractors at the bases to participate in the Canadian unemployment insurance scheme and plans to introduce legislation to permit the U.S. Government to bring all its own local employees in Canada under that scheme.

Supplementary Memorandum

SECRET [Ottawa], April 20, 1950

LEGISLATION TO CARRY OUT P.J.B.D. RECOMMENDATION ON U.S. JURISDICTIONAL RIGHTS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

1. This memorandum on the problems involved in implementing the P.J.B.D. Recommendation on U.S. jurisdiction in Newfoundland was prepared following a meeting attended by Mr. Claxton, Mr. Bradley and Mr. Pearson on April 18. The matter had previously been discussed at a meeting of officials of the Departments concerned.

(a) Security Legislation

2. The Recommendation includes the following:

> "(c) That the Canadian Government undertake to seek legislation to protect United States interests in security offences as envisaged by Article V of the Leased Bases Agreement".

The intention of the Board was that the Canadian Government seek legislation to provide for the prosecution in the Canadian courts of offences committed by any persons not members of the U.S. Forces in connection with the secrets of these Forces.

3. The Recommendation also called for the waiver for all time of the U.S. rights of jurisdiction over Canadian citizens, other British subjects and aliens who are not U.S. citizens connected with the bases and the suspension for an initial period of five years of U.S. rights of jurisdiction over U.S. civilians connected with the bases.

4. It is not clear whether the U.S. authorities would be willing to suspend their jurisdictional rights over security offences committed by U.S. civilians until our security legislation comes into force. They would probably state that the suspension of these rights could only become operative when Canadian legislation takes effect.

5. Article V of the Bases Agreement requires that Canada take such steps "as may from time to time be agreed to be necessary with a view to the enactment of legislation to ensure the adequate security and protection" of the U.S. Forces, their property and operations in Newfoundland. With the proposed reduction of U.S. jurisdictional rights in Newfoundland, the need for Canadian security legislation is increased as the U.S. Forces would be abandoning, in peacetime at least, their right to try even U.S. civilian nationals employed at the bases for security offences committed by them.

6. Any new security legislation, while primarily designed to meet the substantial security problems of the leased bases in Newfoundland, should perhaps apply uniformly throughout Canada and would thus afford protection to U.S. forces stationed elsewhere in Canada with the consent of the Canadian Government. Although the Recommendation mentions Article V of the Bases Agreement, which applies only to Newfoundland, this should probably be looked upon only as an illustration of the kind of legislation contemplated. It seems clear from the PJBD Journal that the Board had in mind legislation to cover security offences against the U.S. Forces committed anywhere in Canada. The Canadian Section of the Board also expressed the hope that the U.S. Government would seek reciprocal legislation with respect to security offences committed in the U.S. against Canadian forces.

7. It is considered that the new security legislation should not be proposed to Parliament as a bill to amend the Visiting Forces (U.S.A.) Act but should be submitted as a bill for a new Act, or for a new part to the Official Secrets Act. It might be introduced with an amendment to the Official Secrets Act (which appears to be called for to give it extra-territorial effect so that it will cover security offences committed by Canadian citizens at offices abroad) and perhaps made a part of general security legislation to cover the forces of North Atlantic Treaty countries stationed in Canada.

8. The new legislation would be confined to the security interests of Atlantic Treaty forces in Canada and would not be so wide as to cover all the security interests of these countries in Canada, such as the operations of their diplomatic missions.

9. It is desirable that the proposed legislation should, if possible, be made on a reciprocal basis so that when the measure is introduced in Parliament it could be announced that the U.S. Government had agreed to seek similar legislation to protect the security interests of Canadian forces stationed in the U.S. Should the U.S. Government be unwilling to seek reciprocal legislation we could not, of course, insist on reciprocity and expect the U.S. to implement the jurisdiction recommendation.

10. The acts which might be defined as offences should, it is considered, include the act of spying, which could be described somewhat along the lines of Section 3(1) of the Official Secrets Act; the act of wrongful communication of information by persons employed by or performing contracts for the U.S. Forces in Canada, along the lines of Section 4 of the Official Secrets Act; and the acts of unauthorized use of uniforms, forgery, personation, etc., as defined in Section 5. The phrase "useful to a foreign power" would have to be altered to read "useful to a foreign power other than the United States". Some of the definitions and procedural clauses of the Official Secrets Act might have to be adapted and incorporated in the bill for a new Act, or referred to if the legislation is to form a new Part to the Official Secrets Act.

11. Instead of the phrase "for any purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the State", of the Official Secrets Act, a term such as "for any purpose prejudicial to the safety or interests of the United States forces" would have to be used. The burden of proof as to what constitutes a purpose prejudicial to the interests of the U.S. Forces should, it is thought, be left on the U.S. authorities, which would have to establish a case to the satisfaction of our courts.

12. It is suggested that the legal officers of the Departments concerned be instructed to prepare a draft of a Bill, bearing in mind the above paragraphs, which after approval by the Canadian authorities, should be shown to the U.S. authorities before being submitted to Parliament.

(b) Compulsory Attendance of Witnesses

13. The Recommendation contains the following paragraph:

> "(d) That the Canadian Government seek amendment to the Visiting Forces (U.S.A.) Act to provide for the compulsory attendance of witnesses required by U.S. Service courts."

The implementation of this should not present serious difficulty. Order-in-Council P.C. 9694 of December 20, 1943, on the legal position of U.S. forces in Canada in wartime, contained in Regulations 9 and 10 provisions for the compulsory attendance of witnesses at U.S. courts-martial by subpoenas issued by competent U.S. service officers. It is considered that subpoenas for this purpose should be issued by competent Canadian authorities, and not by U.S. officers, as well as served by peace officers. Provisions to this effect might suitably be inserted before the present Section 5 of the Visiting Forces Act.

(c) Priority of Jurisdiction in Newfoundland

14. The PJBD considered the form of a letter to be sent to the Government of Newfoundland to provide for priority of jurisdiction in practice for U.S. Service courts in the case of certain offences, as referred to in paragraph (b)(2) of the Recommendation on jurisdiction. The draft letter is as follows:

> "It is contemplated extending the Visiting Forces (U.S.A.) Act to the Province of Newfoundland, including the U.S. Leased Bases. Although the present Act does not interfere with the jurisdiction of Canadian courts and law enforcement authorities, it is the hope of the Government of Canada that those charged with law enforcement may rarely find it necessary to bring members of United States forces before Canadian courts. In particular, it is hoped that, when an offence is by its nature essentially prejudicial to the discipline of the United States Armed Forces, when an offence is committed within the Leased Areas, or when an offence involves only members of United States forces or only the property of the Government of the United States, the Canadian authorities will find it desirable to leave the wrong-doer to be dealt with by United States Service courts and authorities.

"I hope that your Government will bring the Act to the attention of law enforcement authorities. I should be glad to learn the views of your Government on the question discussed in the preceding paragraph."

This letter is based substantially on the communication sent to the Lieutenant-Governors of the nine provinces in July 1947 and should present no difficulty. At the PJBD meeting, the Attorney-General of Newfoundland indicated informally that its form was acceptable to him.

DESPATCH 2710 Ottawa, September 13, 1950

STATIONING OF U.S.A.F. 43RD MEDIUM BOMBER GROUP AT GOOSE BAY

The following, for your information, is an account of the arrangements made in this connection last month with the United States Embassy in Ottawa.

2. On the afternoon of August 18, the United States Embassy enquired whether there would be any objection to the U.S.A.F.'s 43rd Medium Bomber Group, then understood to consist of sixty-five B-29's and B-50's, being moved to Goose Bay within the next two or three days for a six-week period of "routine training". Some 1400 personnel would be involved in this move. Also, as some of the bombers to be stationed at Goose Bay would be making landings at Harmon Air Force Base (the leased base at Stephenville, Newfoundland), an additional 850 personnel would be posted to the latter field. The U.S.A.F. had indicated that immediate Canadian approval was desired because certain reserve air transport personnel required to transfer the Group's equipment to Goose Bay would only be available during the following week.

3. The same afternoon, a message† was received by the R.C.A.F. from Air Vice Marshal Campbell indicating that the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff had decided to approve despatch of the Group as recently as the previous day. In the circumstances, while the State Department had been informed only that the Group would be engaged in routine training, the impression was at once gained in Ottawa that the main purpose of the move was to deploy the aircraft to Labrador against a possible general emergency.

4. The matter was raised in Cabinet which was meeting at the time and, later in the afternoon, with Mr. Claxton's approval, the United States Embassy was informed orally that "the U.S.A.F. had explained to the R.C.A.F. the object of the move and that, in the circumstances, it had been approved for a six-week period".

5. On August 19, the Chief of the Air Staff received a further message† from Air Vice Marshal Campbell quoting a letter he had received from General Walsh, U.S.A.F. member, Permanent Joint Board on Defence. This letter contained additional information. It explained that the 43rd Bomber Group, which comprised 45 aircraft, would be accompanied by a tanker squadron of 20 planes and that the airlift to Goose Bay and Harmon of the necessary personnel and equipment would be carried out by some eighty C-46 Commando aircraft. It stated that the bombers would be stationed in Labrador for six weeks "for familiarization of the area northeast of Goose Bay" and that "flying will accordingly be primarily in that area."

6. General Walsh's letter also quoted the following portion of a paper on which the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff had based their decision:

> "Recent Joint Chiefs of Staff decisions have committed a considerable portion of the Department of Defence airlift to the Far East. Joint Chiefs of Staff decisions have authorized certain Strategic Air Command deployment to the Far East and United Kingdom. The commitment of airlift has been so extensive that, in the event of a general emergency, Strategic Air Command deployments under current war plans would be dangerously delayed. General LeMay[36] has, therefore, requested that the Forty-Third Bomb Group and two tanker squadrons be rotated to Goose Bay commencing 24 August, 1950."

It is therefore not improbable that the United States authorities will ask permission to leave these aircraft at Goose Bay for a further period.

7. I should appreciate it if this despatch were not shown to the Canadian Joint Staff since a copy of the signal giving the text of General Walsh's letter was given to an officer of this Department on a personal basis. Incidentally, the fact that some of the most important information regarding this proposal was given to Ottawa through Service channels — combined with a statement by an officer of the U.S. Embassy on August 18 that the U.S.A.F. had proved unwilling to provide the Canadian Desk of the State Department with some of the further information we had requested on receiving the proposal — would seem to suggest that at least some in the U.S.A.F. are reluctant to trust the State Department with details of plans for the deployment of Strategic Air Command units.

STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND PLANS AFFECTING CANADA

1. It will be recalled that, at the urgent request of the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff, authority was given on August 18 for the immediate movement to Goose Bay, for a [36] Le lieutenant-général Curtis E. LeMay, commandant en chef du Commandement aérien stratégique. Lieutenant-General Curtis E. LeMay, Commander-in-Chief, Strategic Air Command.

6-week period, of the 43rd Medium Bomber Group of the USAF's Strategic Air Command (45 B-29's and B-50's and 20 tanker aircraft). This entailed the movement of some 1400 USAF personnel to Goose and 850 to Harmon A.F.B. (the leased base at Stephenville) at which landings were to be made during the period of training at Goose.

2. It was made clear at the time that the object of this move was to have the Group deployed against a general emergency, although it is understood that no "special" weapons were moved to Goose. Prior to the Permanent Joint Board on Defence meeting on October 2-5, it was, therefore, believed probable in Ottawa that Washington would be requesting permission for the 43rd Bomber Group to remain at, or return shortly to, Goose for a further period, but nothing was known in Ottawa of any plans the U.S. authorities might be preparing for the basing or staging of strategic bombers in Canada in peace or war. Incidentally, the 43rd Group returned to the U.S. last week because there are no buildings to house it at Goose and it could not remain there under canvas at this season.

3. During this week's meeting of the Joint Defence Board, the U.S. Section initiated a lengthy off-the-record discussion of:

(1) certain construction that the USAF wishes to carry out urgently this fall at Goose, so that it may be physically possible for SAC bombers to return there before the end of the year;

(2) the problem, in the immediate future, of obtaining Canadian permission for the stationing of Bomber Groups from time to time at Goose Bay without unduly jeopardizing the security of the plans of the Strategic Air Command;

(3) proposals for the deployment of SAC bombers to various parts of the world which are presently under consideration in Washington and appear likely to lead to an early high-level approach for permission for the Strategic Air Command to put Goose Bay and to some extent Harmon (and possibly Gander) to certain uses in the present situation and in any general emergency.

4. To deal first with the third point, on the first day of the Joint Defence Board meeting, Major General W.C. Sweeney, in charge of plans at Strategic Air Command, gave the Board a remarkably full and frank briefing on present thinking in the USAF with regard to the employment of the Strategic Air Command.

5. Following is a brief outline of his thesis. The timing of the first retaliatory blow in any strategic air warfare will be crucial. It is essential for the SAC aircraft to be deployed and completely ready for action at appropriate bases, and to be free to pass through advance bases, so that they may discharge their mission promptly and also avoid being caught on the ground where they would be high priority targets.

6. The principal Soviet targets are in the Urals, the Moscow-Leningrad area, and the Don basin. Present and potential USAF bases in Western Europe, North Africa and the Western Pacific are considered too vulnerable (owing to their proximity to the U.S.S.R.) to initial Soviet strategic bombing for the USAF to risk basing any appreciable number of strategic bombers there in peacetime against an emergency. It is therefore considered that the bulk of the SAC bombers should be based within the defence system of this continent at points as near as possible to the Soviet targets. As regards suitable existing bases on this continent, it is estimated that, from Goose and Harmon 75 to 100 percent of the targets could be reached; from Eileson (Fairbanks), Alaska, and Limestone, Maine, 50 to 75 percent; and from bases further south in the States, 25 to 50 percent. Eileson is considered unsuitable as an SAC peacetime base as being too vulnerable to Soviet bombing and requiring flights over extensive areas of the Arctic. Bases further north in Canada are considered impracticable from the point of view of supply.

7. Thus, according to present USAF thinking, Goose would be the principal SAC advance assault base and the greatest importance therefore is attached to Strategic Air Command being able to station SAC bombers there in peacetime, and, in war, to stage large numbers of aircraft through Goose in an emergency, as a final fuelling and supply point. Some 250 would have to pass through on the first retaliatory attack. It would also be desired to use Harmon for the basing of tanker aircraft, and some limited use of Gander is also a possibility.

8. The principal requirements for implementation of any such plans at Goose would be the construction of additional personnel accommodation and storage facilities for fuel, munitions and other supplies, and the creation of adequate air and sea defences. The U.S. would apparently be prepared to assume the responsibility for providing the installations and manpower required.

9. While it appears that the President and the U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff have approved broad principles for the employment of Strategic Air Command, it was indicated by the U.S. Section of the Joint Defence Board that the detailed plans for the deployment of SAC bombers and munitions to Canada still required approval at the highest levels in Washington. It was inferred, however, that proposals substantially similar to the plans outlined in paras. 5-8 above would very probably be made to the Canadian Government at a high level in the near future.

10. The U.S. Chairman suggested that the NATO Defence Committee's action in approving, in December 1949, a Strategic Concept for the defence of the North Atlantic area, appeared to constitute approval by the Canadian Government of the use of bases in Canada for strategic bombing, and also referred to the fact that the Newfoundland Bases Agreement does not specifically limit the types of military activities that may be carried out at Harmon (or the other leased bases). Following is the extract from the approved Strategic Concept to which the U.S. Chairman referred:

"IV. MILITARY MEASURES TO IMPLEMENT DEFENSE CONCEPT

Basic Undertakings

7. Over-all defense must provide in advance of war emergency, specifically for the following basic undertakings in furtherance of the common objective to defend the North Atlantic area. The successful conduct of these undertakings should be assured by close coordination of military action as set forth in over-all plans.

(a) Insure the ability to carry out strategic bombing promptly by all means possible with all types of weapons, without exception. This is primarily a U.S. responsibility assisted as practicable by other nations."

11. The Canadian Section indicated that it was not aware of any specific NATO arrangement which would constitute definitive approval of the use of Goose or Harmon by the Strategic Air Command, and that, whatever the terms of the Newfoundland Bases Agreement, the Canadian Government would be certain to feel that it would have to approve any SAC use of bases in Canada. It has since been learned in Ottawa that, before the Strategic Concept was approved, Canadian officials enquired whether the U.S. would require SAC bases in Canada and were informed that it would not. In any case agreement on a strategic concept which merely served as a basis for NATO Planning, could hardly be taken as committing Governments to specific projects before they were embodied in approved joint plans.

12. Apparently SAC considered it necessary to give the Canadian Section such a frank briefing on its plans because it felt that its requests with regard to the matters mentioned in para. 3 (1) and (2) above might otherwise be rejected by the Canadian Government. The questions will be dealt with in letters to the Secretary, Chiefs of Staff Committee.

C.C. EBERTS

The U.S. Section's requests with regard to the matters dealt with in para. 3 (1) and (2) above are reported in our two letters, of October 11† and October 17,† to Secretary, C.S.C.

DEFENCE MINISTERS, OCTOBER 28, 1950

(A) Canadian Army Special Force

1. Hostilities are practically over in Korea and an immediate decision has to be made as to the disposition of the Canadian Army Special Force. This was to have moved to Fort Lewis for embarkation on November 23 en route for Okinawa to complete unit training there. We have already agreed with the United States authorities that if the force or any part of it is to go to Korea, it should go direct, saving the considerable expense of putting a camp in shape at Okinawa. The question has arisen as to whether the whole or any part of the force should go to Korea to police the country while order is being restored.

2. General MacArthur intends to remove a considerable proportion of United States troops within the next two months, leaving a relatively small occupation force. United Nations and United States authorities keenly desire that the occupying force should be representative of nations in addition to the United States. In Korea already are forces of the United Kingdom, Australia, Turkey and ambulance teams from India and Sweden. Troops from the Philippines and Thailand are expected to proceed to Korea.

3. If Canadian troops are required for pacification duties, it is recommended that in addition to the advance party of 345 en route now we should sent a battalion of about 1,000 officers and men (or its equivalent) with additional supporting personnel totalling about a hundred. These would either embark as planned on November 23 or later. For this purpose one of the existing second battalions would be detailed. Service authorities advise against asking for volunteers from the whole force as the unit composed in this way would have to be given additional training in Canada in order to enable it to act as a unit.

4. The remainder of the Special Force would not move to Fort Lewis, near Seattle.

5. To maintain discipline and morale it is essential that we should announce now our intentions with regard to this force. Its training has been pressed forward so fast and so far that it is desirable that the force and reinforcement stream should proceed now to company, battalion and brigade training. This cannot be done in Canada in winter except with a great expenditure of money, time and effort.

6. Assuming one battalion goes to Korea, the alternatives for the remainder of the force are:

(a) Either to keep the remainder or a large part of it in Canada. This would give rise to serious accommodation problems and disciplinary difficulties.

(b) To have the remainder or a considerable part of it go to Europe as part of the integrated force as soon as this is organized. We have learned that in all probability the first of the additional divisions the U.S. will send will only be ready to move about March. Until then the integrated force will consist largely of the present U.S. two divisions in West Germany and the U.K. two divisions with supporting elements.

(c) To have the remainder proceed much as planned for embarkation for Korea but go to Alabama instead to complete its unit training. The U.S. is not enthusiastic about this because of the overcrowded conditions of their own training centres. However, preliminary and confidential discussions indicate that the U.S. would cooperate.

7. In order that movement arrangements can be made, equipment provided, leave arranged for, etc., it is of the utmost urgency that a decision be reached adopting one of these three courses.

8. In a matter of months the members of the Special Force should be individually canvassed to re-engage for the active force, the only substantial difference being the increase from the term of engagement from eighteen months to three years. The effect of making this change could be good provided a sufficient number did. It is felt that the approach should not be made until the men have got accustomed to the new role for the force.

(B) Goose Bay

9. Acceleration of the expanded U.S. programme has led them to approach us with a view to a considerable expansion of facilities and accommodation at Goose Bay. The base there was leased to Canada by the U.K. Government for Newfoundland in 1944 for a term of 99 years and is entirely under Canadian control. A large part of the expenditure on this to date has been made by Canada. At the present time there are on the base the following:

Canadian Services	353
Canadian Civilians, D.N.D.	172
Canadian Civilians, D.O.T. and others	110
Canadian Civilians, U.S.A.F. (as of June 30)	476
Total Canadians	1,111
U.S. Services (as of June 30)	753

10. In negotiating adjustments in the Newfoundland leased base agreements with the U.S., it was agreed, with Cabinet approval, in consideration of the U.S. giving up certain rights in the bases under lease to them, that we would give the U.S. a twenty-five year lease to part of the Goose Bay base for the construction of additional accommodation, particularly married quarters. It is understood this arrangement has been accepted by the President and State Department as well as by service heads in the U.S., and a detailed agreement is being worked out.

11. Now the U.S. have asked to be allowed to increase accommodation for up to 4,000 men, largely of a temporary nature, part of which would be in a separate area of something less than one-quarter of a square mile.

12. The U.S. authorities also contemplate establishing a number of additional radar stations, etc., on the coast of Labrador. These would supplement and fit into other chains and would add greatly to the defences of the industrial centres of Canada and the U.S. They would involve large expenditures on construction, transportation and equipment, as well as considerable manpower. The U.S. is prepared to meet these additional costs as well as others incidental to this expansion.

13. There can be no doubt that this expansion is justified, indeed essential, from the point of view of the defence of this continent as well as in the overall strategy. It is something which, if we had the resources, we would want to do ourselves. It is, however, quite beyond the resources of Canada to undertake this and, moreover, a large part of the whole operation would have to be American in any event in view of their strategic position and role.

14. Under the arrangements proposed by the U.S., they would bear the expenses and provide the manpower now contemplated. Undoubtedly the operations will require considerable additions to our own requirements for construction, men and materials. Although it has not been mentioned by the U.S., the establishment would certainly involve fighter protection by a squadron or more and also anti-aircraft defence. While the fighter squadron might be U.S., it is believed that the Canadian people would expect that ground troops defending the soil of Canada should be Canadian. We have stored at Goose Bay the guns of a heavy anti-aircraft battery. It would probably be necessary to provide guns we have stored in Montreal for another battery and to have at Goose Bay the officers and men of one anti-aircraft battery ready for instant action. The crew for the other battery could be flown in immediately by air. These could be provided from the Regiment at Picton in rotation without additional manpower or equipment requirements but with provision of additional accommodation.

15. Goose Bay at present is used by 60 trans-Atlantic civilian aircraft per month. T.C.A. use it regularly on schedule for 12 flights per month, the remainder being alternative landings when other airports are not available due to weather. In the spring the number of landings and take-offs at Goose increases to a figure of 712 per month. The runways at Gander are not strong enough to take heavy aircraft in spring. Strengthening and improving the runways at Gander is part of the programme of D.O.T., but not yet provided for in estimates. This development was regarded by D.O.T. and D.N.D. as a matter of high priority even before the present approach was made. While the U.S. has not indicated that the proposed expansion of Goose would curtail civilian traffic, that would be a reasonable conclusion. It might result in Goose being closed to all except emergency landings. This would only be possible if the work at Gander were proceeded with.

16. General McNaughton, Chairman of the Canadian Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence, strongly recommends agreement to the U.S. proposals as being an essential part of our joint defence structure. The same view is taken by the Canadian Chiefs of Staff.

17. I am sure that we cannot anticipate now all the implications of this very important proposal. However, some have been indicated and they are serious enough. This notwithstanding, I do not see how we can adopt any other course and recommend my being authorized to advise the U.S. that we will permit the expansion to go forward along the lines of the existing and proposed arrangements, as well as those additional features outlined here.

(C) Equipment for NAT

18. Our offer to transfer the armament of a division to one of the European countries has been considered by the Standing Group who recommend that it be shipped to The Netherlands which has been particularly pressing for it. (Belgium and France also made enquiries.) This advice coincides with the view of the services and myself. In anticipation, we have packed the equipment and it is ready for shipment from Montreal immediately. The Netherlands would pay the cost of shipping. Cabinet Defence Committee has recommended that this equipment should move to The Netherlands without delay.

19. We have made enquiries as to the possibility of replacing this equipment from the U.S. The U.S. would be prepared to give us priority above that of other NAT countries or National Guard divisions. The equipment, including some additional items such as new tanks for an infantry division, would cost approximately $39,000,000 which is not far off the estimate given to the Cabinet. Very little of this could be made in Canada without great delay and at very much higher cost. However, we should explore further the possibility of making part of this equipment in Canada for our own use and also for delivery to NAT countries out of the $300,000,000 vote.

20. The Cabinet Defence Committee recommends that we at once arrange to purchase such of this equipment from the United States as we cannot economically manufacture in Canada and meet the cost of the U.S. equipment needed to replace that shipped out of the $300,000,000 vote. The question arises as to whether we should accept the U.S. offer to transfer the additional equipment needed for a division on their scales, and pay for this out of the $300,000,000 vote also.

21. As soon as satisfactory arrangements have been made for re-supply, we could then proceed to arrange for the delivery of a second division's equipment and its replacement.

(D) North Atlantic Treaty Organization

22. My reports to the Cabinet and the more recent statements by Mr. Pearson indicate our dissatisfaction with the organization under the North Atlantic Treaty. This particularly relates to the existence of separate bodies of ministers — the Council of Foreign Ministers, the Committee of Defence Ministers, a Committee of Finance Ministers — the organization into five regional groups, each with a complicated structure, the Military Committee of Chiefs of Staff, to which the Standing Group of the representatives of the Chiefs of Staff of France, the U.K. and U.S. are nominally responsible and finally, the Supply and Finance Organization. The unsatisfactory working of this machinery led to the institution of Deputies of the Council of Foreign Ministers, which have been meeting and working well under the chairmanship of Mr. Spofford.

23. I raised at Paris and The Hague and Mr. Pearson at London and Paris the possibility of streamlining this machinery of which everyone was critical. It now appears as if most of the countries feel that something should be done.

24. This is obviously a matter which must be worked out in discussion and probably by stages. If authorized, I would propose to support the idea that the organization should consist of:

(a) a single council of ministers who would be representatives of governments, which would be attended by Foreign Ministers, Defence Ministers or Finance Ministers or by one representing the others or by their representatives as convenient;

(b) a committee of deputies responsible to the council.

While it would probably be undesirable to abolish the other committees, we could see how we could get along without their meeting.

25. Similar streamlining would be suggested on the military side and is currently being examined by the Military Committee now sitting in Washington.

26. If authorized and the opportunity presented itself, I would put forward suggestions along these lines as they might be modified in detail in consequence of discussions at Washington.

(E) Germany

27. At New York the U.S. raised and strongly urged that Western Germany be progressively rearmed. The military situation is such that without this the defence of Western Europe is a virtual impossibility. France has up to this date resisted this idea in its entirety. However, observers believe that in the long run France will accept it.

28. In my view this is a matter which is of primary concern to the countries more immediately affected and while we should if necessary, and it appears then to be desirable, support the idea of encouraging the establishment and arming of units of Western Germans under the command of the occupying forces, this should not be actively pressed by us and we should not take an active part in the discussion.

NATIONAL DEFENCE; GOOSE BAY

8. The Minister of National Defence reported that acceleration of the U.S. defence programme had led U.S. authorities to approach the Canadian Government with a view to considerable expansion of their facilities and accommodation at Goose Gay.

In negotiating adjustments in the Newfoundland Leased Bases Agreements with the United States, it had been agreed, with Cabinet approval, that in consideration of the United States giving up certain rights in the bases under lease to them, we would give the United States a twenty-year lease to part of the Goose Bay base for the construction of additional accommodation, particularly married quarters. Now the U.S. Government had asked to be allowed to provide increased accommodation, largely of a temporary nature, for up to 4,000 men, and to establish a number of additional radar stations, etc. on the Labrador coast. The U.S. Government was prepared to meet the additional costs incidental to this expansion.

No further rights would be granted to the American troops with respect to these latter installations than the limited rights they were granted at such places as Churchill. It appeared that, under American law, Canadian Special Force personnel training in the United States would have greater privileges than Canada afforded Americans in the same circumstances.

There was no doubt that the expansion was essential from the point of view of the defence of this continent as well as in the overall strategy. A large part of the operation was necessarily American in view of their strategic position and role, and furthermore was quite beyond Canadian resources.

9. Mr. Claxton said that Goose Bay at present was used by sixty trans-Atlantic civilian aircraft per month. Trans Canada Air Lines used it regularly for twelve scheduled flights per month; the remainder being alternative landings when other airports were not available due to weather. In the spring the number of landings and take-offs at Goose increased to 712 per month, largely due to the fact that the runways at Gander were not strong enough to take heavy aircraft at that time of year. Strengthening and improving the runways at Gander was a part of the programme of the Department of Transport. It was anticipated that the expansion of Goose Bay might make it necessary to curtail civilian traffic to emergency landings. This would only be possible if the work at Gander were proceeded with but it did not appear that this would be feasible before the spring.

(Minister's memorandum, Oct. 24, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 241-50).

10. The Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested that the Canadian position might appear anomalous to some extent. At the same time as expansion of American military activity on Canadian soil was permitted, Canadian troops might be sent out of the country to participate in an integrated force in Europe. It might be asked if we could not assume additional commitments in Canada by curtailing our commitments abroad. If for instance we were prepared to send five fighter squadrons to Europe, might not one be made available for Goose Bay?

11. The Minister of National Health and Welfare suggested that it might be difficult to explain to the public why we were prepared to rearm Western Europe to the extent of $300 million when we were prepared to have the Americans assume additional military commitments on Canadian soil.

12. The Prime Minister said that in making the arrangements with the United States we should be careful to reserve our position as much as possible. It might be pointed out to them that the fighter squadron at Goose Bay could be provided by Canada or the United States, whichever seemed most desirable at the time. We were, however, engaged in a collective effort and, in order for it to be effective, each country should do, as much as possible, the sort of thing it was best suited for. The role of strategic bombing, in which the proposed expansion of Goose Bay would play an essential part, was one that could only be filled by the United States.

13. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the Minister of National Defence be authorized to advise the U.S. Government that the Canadian Government would be prepared to permit the expansion of U.S. facilities for Goose Bay along the suggested lines, with the extent of Canadian participation to be fixed at a later date.

TOP SECRET

Reference: WA-2411 of October 6† and your despatch 2558 of October 14.†

PROPOSED U.S. STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND PROJECTS AT GOOSE BAY

1. Your communications under reference indicated that the USAF wishes to undertake the immediate construction at Goose Bay of:

(1) 8 storage buildings, and certain specific related facilities, at a site to be agreed upon by the local Canadian and U.S. Commanders, on the understanding that approval of this project "will not confer on the U.S. any interest in or title to the land involved;"

(2) 20 Troop accommodation buildings and 20,000 square feet of warehousing — all of a prefabricated and temporary type — on the understanding that approval of these projects "will confer no rights or interest in the land and that the buildings will be removed upon request."

2. These requests were first raised at the meeting of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence on October 2-5 when, by way of explanation, the plans of Strategic Air Command, U.S.A.F., were outlined in some detail by a S.A.C. General. It was indicated to the Canadian Section that the U.S. Government will, in a few weeks' time, be making proposals at a high level for the use of Goose Bay, in peace-time and in any general emergency, as the principal advance base for Strategic Air Command. It was also stated that these proposals might include a request for the limited use of Harmon Field (the leased base at Stephenville) and, possibly, Gander in this connection. When he sees you this week, Mr. Heeney will be able to explain more fully why the USAF is interested in Strategic Air Command having the use of these bases and the general nature of the proposals that the U.S. Government is expected to make in the near future. Incidentally, Messrs. Benninghoff and Wyght of the Canadian desk at the State Department were present at the PJBD meeting and are therefore quite familiar with the whole subject.

3. Mr. Claxton and the Prime Minister have given some consideration to the proposals discussed in a preliminary way by the PJBD and are understood to be prepared to give sympathetic consideration to Washington's proposals when they are received. I imagine that, in the event of approval of any proposals that are forthcoming, we will have to give the U.S. authorities a detailed document setting forth very clearly the circumstances in which operations from these bases may commence in the event of an emergency. We will also want to ensure that Strategic Air Command will not have access to the bases indefinitely and that Canada will not have to make crippling payments in order to liquidate the USAF interest in installations at Goose Bay and Gander.

4. You will recall from our despatch No. D2710 of September 13 that, on August 18, the USAF's 43rd Medium Bomber Group (B-29s, and B-50s) was permitted to move to Goose Bay for a 6-week period as a precautionary measure. This Group, which was living under canvas at Goose, had to return to the U.S. at the end of September. At the recent PJBD meeting, it was indicated that the various buildings mentioned in paragraph No. 1 above were required urgently because the U.S. Government would in due course be asking permission to deploy a Bomber Group to Goose Bay by the end of the year.

5. I should be grateful if you would inform the State Department that the requests for immediate construction of the storage buildings and related facilities, troop housing and warehousing at Goose Bay have been approved subject to the conditions stipulated by the U.S. authorities (paragraph No. 1 above) and to the following understandings:

(a) that there will be no storage of special weapons at Goose without the express approval of the Canadian Government;

(b) that the period during which the storage buildings, troop housing and warehousing, which are all understood to be required for the purposes of Strategic Air Command, may remain at Goose is a matter for subsequent consideration;

(c) the sites for the troop housing and warehousing will be subject to agreement between the Canadian and U.S. Commanding Officers at Goose Bay.

6. At the request of the U.S. Section, PJBD, information on all aspects of Strategic Air Command's interest in Goose Bay and the other bases is being kept in just as few hands as possible here and papers on the matter are being held in a safe. I think it might be useful if further correspondence on the subject between the Department and the Embassy took the form, whenever possible, of numbered letters in envelopes marked "To be opened only by ..." (Mr. Wrong or Mr. Heeney as the case may be).[37]

TELEGRAM WA-2758 Washington, October 31, 1950

TOP SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following for Reid from Wrong, Begins: Reference letter D-3254 of October 27,† Goose Bay. After clearing paragraph 5 with Mr. Claxton, Benninghoff was informed of its contents today.

2. He saw no objection to the additional understandings proposed, but made the comment that understanding (b) and (c) in paragraph 5 might have to be reconsidered in the light of the Goose Bay lease agreement now under negotiation. He emphasized that he was speaking purely personally in expressing the opinion that the formalization of the arrangements concerning additional construction at Goose Bay should be related to the lease agreement.

3. I note that in paragraph 3 you say that, in the event that the proposals are agreed to by the Prime Minister and Mr. Claxton, it would be necessary to give the U.S. authorities a detailed document. This, I assume, would initiate an exchange of notes between the Canadian and United States Governments. I take Benninghoff's comment to mean that, in his opinion, it might be better to have the lease negotiations concluded before such an exchange of notes takes place, although, if agreeable, arrangements could be proceeded with on an informal basis.

4. The talk with Benninghoff did not go beyond informing him of the contents of paragraph 5, which he undertook to transmit personally to General Walsh, who, you will recall, initiated the correspondence in a letter which was transmitted to you in my WA-2411 of October 6.† Ends.

DUMPING OF BOMBS BY U.S. PLANE

1. The attached CP despatch from the [Montreal] Gazette[38] gives an account of a U.S. plane dumping 500-lb. bombs in the St. Lawrence on a training flight from

Goose Bay to Tucson, Arizona. The despatch indicates that a plane got into difficulty and found it necessary to dump its bombs. Considerable alarm was caused in villages nearby.

2. So far as we can discover, we have not authorized the United States to carry live bombs over Canadian territory, with the exception of flights on practice bombing in the bombing area off Argentia. We have authorized training flights by Strategic Air Command, but no suggestion was made in the request to us that live bombs would be carried. Our authorization is contained in Telegram No. EX-1089 of July 7 to Washington.[39]

3. It is suggested that we should demand an immediate explanation from the United States, and that we should enquire on what authority live bombs were being carried, and whether this has occurred previously. It is further suggested that the United States Ambassador should be called in either by yourself or Mr. Claxton, and that it should be indicated to him that we view the incident with great concern. The following questions might be put to him:

(1) We want a full and immediate explanation of the incident.

(2) By what authority were live bombs being carried over Canadian territory on this flight?

(3) How many planes were on the flight?

(4) How many planes on the flight were carrying live bombs, and what types of bombs were they carrying?

(5) Apart from bombing flights for purposes of practice bombing in approved areas off Argentia, have United States planes been carrying live bombs over Canadian territory on previous occasions, and if so, on what occasions?

PROVISION AND CONTROL OF NEW U.S. MILITARY INSTALLATIONS IN CANADA[40]

1. During the war, the U.S. Forces were permitted to construct, at their own expense and very largely with U.S. manpower, a number of installations in Canada, principally air, weather and communications stations — including operations, administration and accommodation buildings of both semi-permanent and temporary types as well as equipment. One result of this policy was that Canada had no semblance of effective control over a number of these installations during the war period. A second result was that, towards the end of the war, the Canadian Government had to pay the U.S. Government large sums for these installations in order to avoid any U.S. claim to use or control of them in peacetime.

2. Since the war, the Canadian authorities have taken over all of the exclusively U.S. military establishments in Canada except a USAF weather station at Padloping Island, N.W.T., and 3 Coast Guard-operated Loran stations in the Province of Newfoundland. In connection with the defence of this continent and the support of forces in Western Europe, however, the U.S. Defense authorities are once more beginning to ask permission to construct installations for their use at various points in Canada.

3. There were four recent requests from the USAF, now approved, for permission to carry out construction projects of significant proportions at Goose Bay (a 125,000-barrel fuel tank, storage buildings costing $250,000, prefabricated personnel accommodation and warehouses costing $1,000,000 and $110,000 respectively). It is understood that there will be similar requests in connection with eight further projects to be laid down at Goose prior to July, 1952. It is expected that, in the near future, the USAF will propose construction of 25-30 new radar stations at various points in Canada, the division of responsibility for financing and manning to depend in each case on the proportion of benefit to be derived by each country. It appears very probable that, next spring, the USAF will want to establish an air station (including accommodation, communications and fuel tankage) at Resolute Bay, N.W.T., for emergency landings. Present indications are that the U.S. Army will ask permission to build a pipeline on the Haines-Fairbanks route next summer.

4. Further, while Canada-U.S. military plans regarding new Service installations that will be required on this continent during the next three or four years have, generally speaking, not yet reached a stage where they constitute firm commitments, it is clear from the current drafts of the plans that, in the next very few years, the U.S. Forces will want an increasing number of new installations for their use at various points in Canada.

5. It would therefore appear desirable to consider, before any more U.S. requests of this kind are received, what general policy or policies might best be adopted in connection with future proposals for new military installations in Canada for the use of the U.S. Forces.

6. From some points of view, the ideal policy would be for Canada to construct, provide, and man as necessary, all military installations required in Canada by the U.S. Forces. This might, however, be beyond Canada's financial resources (at least unless the U.S. provided the equipment as distinct from the buildings), would entail the diversion of Canadian civilian manpower and materials from industry and the Canadian military construction programme, and might well mean, if Canadian defence responsibilities at home are taken into account, that only very limited Canadian military manpower could be made available for service outside the country.

7. Following are the main policies that would appear to be open to consideration:

(a) Canadian construction at U.S. expense of all permanent-type structures required by the U.S. Forces, with U.S. provision of all types of equipment and all military manpower required for these installations. This would avoid the possibility of Canada having to buy up, at a later date, buildings constructed at unreasonable prices, but would give Canada no control whatever over the installations — even though it would, presumably, retain title to the land.

(b) Canadian construction at Canadian expense of all permanent-type structures, with the U.S. contributing all equipment and military manpower as in (a). Ownership of the permanent-type structures would give Canada some limited measure of control. Canadian provision of permanent-type structures with U.S. provision of most of the necessary equipment is part of the formula on which the Canada-U.S. Arctic weather stations are operating.

(c) Canadian construction at Canadian expense of all permanent-type structures, Canadian provision of some proportion of the military manpower, with U.S. provision of all or a large proportion of the equipment required. If Canada were to provide half the military personnel and the C.O. at each installation (as in the case of the civilians at the Joint Arctic weather stations) it would have a far greater measure of control, even if it was unable to provide a substantial proportion of the air and water transportation.

(d) U.S. construction, equipment and manning of all installations required by the U.S. Forces on the understanding that, being required only for a period of emergency, the installations would be vacated by the U.S. Forces by a specific date and put up for sale, or turned over to the Canadian Government without charge, or remain the property of the U.S. Government while being available for use by the Canadian Government. Washington might well have difficulty in obtaining authorization to spend large sums in Canada on the basis of its having to make something approaching a gift of the installations to Canada after a period of years.

(e) Canadian assumption of the cost of constructing and manning some proportion of the installations required by the U.S., in exchange for U.S. provision of arms, training, etc. for the Canadian Forces.

8. Wherever possible, there should probably be a condition that the U.S. Forces vacate any new installation by a specific date, say, 1960, unless otherwise agreed by the Canadian Government at that date. Consideration would doubtless have to be given to whether it would be desirable and possible for Canada to adopt policy (a), (b), (c), (d) or (e):

(i) in peacetime only or also in an emergency;

(ii) in the case of all installations required by the U.S. or only those in localities likely to be of considerable importance in the years to come to a more developed Canada — e.g. Goose Bay, Churchill, Edmonton, Whitehorse, etc.

In this connection, it should be noted that, as part of the settlement of the Newfoundland Bases question, it is proposed to give the U.S. a twenty-year lease of an area at Goose where the U.S. Forces would be free to carry out any construction they wish, subject to the consent of the local senior Canadian officer, and to base any activities in or over Canada, subject to the consent of the Canadian Government. In granting this lease, possibly it would be desirable for the Canadian Government to provide the buildings required by the U.S. Forces as, in the long run, Goose appears likely to have increasing importance to Canada as a link in international air routes and as a base for the development of the Eastern Arctic and sub-Arctic regions.

9. It would be difficult to make any realistic proposals as to policy without further information as to the number and types of installations that will be required by the U.S. Forces. Possibly the Department of National Defence might be asked to endeavour to provide a realistic estimate of the installations that may be required during, say, the next three or four years. The matter is of some urgency, as a number of important U.S. requests for construction in Canada are expected in the near future.

DUMPING OF BOMBS BY U.S. PLANE

I did not see the U.S. Ambassador yesterday because it developed that the R.C.A.F. had some knowledge of the flight in question and perhaps even that bombs might be carried. A/V/M [A.L.] James had got through by telephone to the C.A.S. and, subsequently, the Minister of National Defence called me last night from Esquimalt.

2. Apparently the plane in question was one of a training flight between the United States and Goose, for which permission had been granted following discussion in Cabinet Defence Committee. The two Air Forces had worked out the arrangements, I understand. Whether or not it was known to any of our people that live bombs would be carried, it has not been determined.

3. In any event, Mr. Claxton agreed that, in the circumstances, we could not take as stiff a line as if we had had no knowledge whatever of the flight. I proposed, and Mr. Claxton agreed, that I should, however, draw the matter to the attention of the United States Ambassador, pointing out that the incident was serious from the political point of view and indicate that failure to work through the normal and accepted channel in such matters would cause trouble.

4. I am seeing Woodward on another matter this morning and propose to mention it in this way.

I. PROVISION AND CONTROL OF NEW U.S. MILITARY INSTALLATIONS IN CANADA

1. The Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs said that Canada was facing a period during which requests for American military installations in this country would be likely to increase substantially in variety and volume. It would be useful to try and determine to some extent principles on which the Canadian attitude might be based in advance of these requests. There were a number of alternative stands that might be taken with regard to possible Canadian contributions to such installations, and formulation of policy would have to depend to a large extent on the scope of the activities the Americans were considering. The forecast of the probable extent of requests for American military installations should be examined in the light of other commitments that would be made or were likely to be made, taking into account the general financial and economic position.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

2. The Chairman said that from his recollection of events at the time, the second sentence of the first paragraph of the paper that had been prepared did not fully reflect the reasons for the Canadian Government purchasing U.S. installations in Canada at the end of the war. While the desirability of Canada acquiring control of these installations had been a consideration, a more compelling one perhaps had been the desirability of reducing our reserves of American dollars.

3. The Chairman, Chiefs of Staff Committee suggested that it would be useful to get an estimate in terms of cost and of manpower before considering general policy. Previously the U.S. had not revealed all its plans to Canada but in view of the fact that recently they had found that it was essential for them to discuss certain plans with us in order to implement them, it might be appropriate to ask them to make known all their planning in which we had an interest. It had been indicated recently that the Americans were attaching much greater importance to the continental defence of North America than had previously been the case.

4. The Deputy Minister of National Defence agreed that it would be desirable to obtain from the Americans the best possible information concerning requests they were likely to make for installations in Canada. However, this would be difficult to secure because planning for continental defence was not always done centrally and because in the sort of creeping mobilization which they were undergoing the tendency was to settle on one project and push it through to completion without always relating it to the whole picture.

5. Mr. Drury said that each of the various arrangements suggested might be followed in one instance or another. As each project would produce a different set of considerations, it was difficult to enunciate common principles that would underlie all of them, with the exception that the principle of Canadian sovereignty should be protected to as great an extent as possible. This could be accomplished if a situation was established whereby, at the termination of any lease or agreement, Canada had an opportunity to exercise her sovereignty.

6. Mr. Bryce said that the Canadian attitude must depend on the scale of the American plans. If this was limited, then Canada might well assume a considerable proportion of the cost of constructing and manning the installations. However, if something much larger was anticipated, it might so distort the whole Canadian effort that we would have to consider different arrangements. The question was part of the whole problem of defence policy and should be related to the effort we were prepared to make on other defence activities, such as civil defence.

7. Dr. Solandt suggested that any U.S. proposal should meet the primary requirement that, in the Canadian judgement, it was a good proposal both from the military and technical points of view.

8. Mr. Robertson said the question involved basic concepts of our defence planning. If, for instance, the maintenance in Europe by voluntary enlistment of one-third of a division, in accordance with the Medium Term Defence Plan, became difficult for Canada and, at the same time, it became necessary for the Americans to station in Canada more personnel than we had in Europe, then a number of fundamental questions were raised about the role of our Forces, enlistment policy, compulsory military training, the importance of home defence, etc.

9. Mr. Drury said that Canada was prepared to accept certain risks with respect to the continental defence of North America which the U.S. were not prepared to accept in view of their much greater economic resources.

9. The Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada suggested that if the importance that the Americans attached to continental defence became apparent it would be difficult for Canada to take a much different attitude. The public would question a policy of defending Canada in Europe if the U.S. considered it necessary to defend themselves in Canada.

10. Mr. Robertson said that in fact Canada would not be in the position of taking a calculated risk that the U.S. was not prepared to take, because insurance against that risk would be provided by the U.S.

11. Dr. Solandt said that in this connection our attitude was greatly influenced by our geographical position. For instance, if we were not adjacent to the U.S. with its numerous valuable targets, our air defence problem would be greatly reduced.

12. Mr. Robertson said that the suggestion that there should be a condition that the U.S. Forces vacate any new installation by a specific date presented certain difficulties. If the installations ceased to be of interest to the U.S., in most cases they would probably no longer be of interest to Canada. It might be possible to take a date that fitted NATO planning, say, twenty years, which was the duration of the Treaty, with the right of review after ten years.

13. The Deputy Minister of Finance pointed out the importance of the right of review so that the kind of situation that had arisen with the Newfoundland bases would not re-occur.

14. Mr. Drury said that the length of any agreement might be related to the nature of the facility contemplated. If the installation was an elaborate one, a longer lease should be granted than in the case of a relatively temporary installation.

15. Mr. Robertson suggested that training facilities for Canadian troops might be secured in the U.S. by agreement with the latter in return for granting of further facilities to them in Canada. This would seem to make sense from both the military and political point of view.

16. Dr. Clark felt that to continue to make arrangements for training Canadians in the U.S. on an ad hoc basis would present less difficulties than making them part of a formal agreement.

17. The Panel, after further discussion, agreed that the Chairman, Chiefs of Staff Committee, attempt to secure from the U.S. authorities the best possible estimate of their plans related to the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the joint U.S.-Canadian defence of North America.

PROPOSED U.S. STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND PROJECTS AT GOOSE BAY

I enclose a Memorandum prepared by Mr. Ignatieff of a conversation which took place in my office yesterday with Mr. Gordon Arneson of the State Department, at his request. From this conversation I was able to get a coherent account of various developments of which I had previously only had fragmentary knowledge. It explained to me for the first time why the concern felt in Canada over the explosion of a bomb jettisoned by a U.S.A.F. bomber a few weeks ago while on a flight from Goose Bay to Maine had not resulted in the receipt of instructions to seek a full explanation from the U.S. Government.

2. After talking to Mr. Arneson I only know with certainty that Air Marshal Curtis and the Prime Minister are informed of the nature of the arrangements made for the temporary storage of special weapons at Goose Bay last August. I assume, however, from the instructions given in the last paragraph of your letter No. D-3376 that you are also aware of these arrangements. It would be helpful if in your reply you could indicate to me what others in Ottawa have knowledge of this very secret matter. At the Embassy it is only known to Mr. Ignatieff, myself, and my secretary, and I shall not mention it to the Chairman of the Joint Staff unless I learn definitely that he has already been informed.

3. You will note that Mr. Arneson's particular purpose was to establish the best channel to employ for further communications on this subject. The alternatives are a Service channel from the U.S. Air Force to the Chief of the Air Staff or a civilian channel from the State Department to me to you. The State Department would prefer not to use the United States Embassy in Ottawa in this connection. I told Mr. Arneson that on the whole I thought the Prime Minister would prefer the employment of the civilian channel, especially since the decision to seek our concurrence is made personally by the President on the recommendation of the Secretaries of State and Defence and the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

4. In view of the gravity of the present international situation, I think it desirable that the procedure should be established within the next two or three weeks, although the present plans do not envisage the storage of special weapons at Goose Bay until the additional construction there is available.

Note d'une conversation avec l'adjoint spécial du secrétaire d'État des États-Unis, le 1er décembre 1950

Memorandum of Conversation with Special Assistant to Secretary of State of United States, December 1, 1950

TOP SECRET [Washington], December 2, 1950

PROPOSED U.S. STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND PROJECTS AT GOOSE BAY

Mr. Gordon Arneson, special assistant to the Secretary of State on atomic energy questions, came to see the Canadian Ambassador at his office on December 1st to discuss the channel through which any further approach from the United States Government to the Canadian Government on the storage of special weapons at Goose Bay should be made.

Mr. Arneson described the arrangements which had been made last August for the temporary stationing of the U.S.A.F. 43rd Bomber Group at Goose which had been agreed by the Canadian Government for a six-weeks period. In connection with this deployment of the Strategic Air Command, a request had been made to the Canadian Government through Air Marshal Curtis for permission to transfer a small number of special weapons, without their nuclear components, for training purposes. Mr. Arneson explained that the approach to Air Marshal Curtis had been made after the President, in accordance with the provisions of the McMahon Act, had authorized the transfer of a given number of these weapons from the custody of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission to the U.S.A.F. for use by the bomber group at Goose Bay and for similar use by the strategic bomber group stationed in the United Kingdom during the period of emergency. Mr. Arneson also explained that while the selected weapons moved to Goose Bay, numbering eleven, consisted of non-nuclear components only, they did include a charge of about 5,000 pounds of high explosive in each bomb. This charge is a necessary component for the detonation of the weapon.

As far as the U.S. Government is concerned, information regarding selected weapons was made available to individuals only on a "need to know" basis and under the strictest precautions of security. On the occasion of the request made last August, the U.S.A.F., on receiving the necessary authority from the President, had chosen Air Marshal Curtis as their point of contact in Canada. Mr. Arneson had been told by Mr. [Robert] LeBaron, Chairman of the U.S. Military Liaison Committee on Atomic Energy, that permission had been granted for the transfer of the special weapons to Goose Bay by the Prime Minister, after Mr. St. Laurent had been approached by Air Marshal Curtis.

The permission by the Canadian Government given last August for the transfer of special weapons to Goose was recognized by the U.S. authorities as being limited to the six-weeks period for which approval had been given for the stationing of the 43rd Bomber Group at Goose. It had also been found that the necessary storage facilities were lacking at Goose, and for this reason urgent request had been made for certain additional construction at Goose at the expense of the United States Government at the end of September. (This request was contained in a letter from General Walsh to Benninghoff of the State Department dated September 28th,† the text of which was transmitted to the Department of External Affairs in teletype WA-2411 of October 6th.†) In the circumstances, the special weapons had to be returned to the United States during the month of October. It was during the transportation of these weapons to the United States that the incident occurred over the St. Lawrence River in which one of the bombs had to be jettisoned and detonated owing to engine trouble in one of the transporting aircraft.

Mr. Arneson said he did not know what progress had been made on construction of storage facilities at Goose, but he had been told by the U.S. Defense authorities concerned that almost certainly a request would have to be made again to the Canadian Government, probably next spring, for permission to transfer a limited number of special weapons to Goose and to store them there. With the authority of Mr. LeBaron and the agreement of the U.S.A.F., Mr. Arneson had come to see the Ambassador in order to find out informally what channel the Canadian Government would prefer to have employed for any further request that might have to be made.

Mr. Arneson was told by the Ambassador that he wished to give some thought to this question and probably consult appropriate individuals in Ottawa before making a reply.

Mr. Arneson said that the President had appointed a special sub-committee of the National Security Council, consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Defense, and the Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, to advise him in cases where the Joint Chiefs of Staff might recommend the transfer of special weapons from the custody of the Atomic Energy Commission to the armed forces. He did not know when such a question would have to be considered by the special sub-committee in the future. It would, however, be desirable to learn soon how the Canadian Government might wish to have any request concerning it handled.

This memorandum of the conversation was dictated by G. Ignatieff, who was also present at the conversation.

U.S. ENQUIRY AS TO APPROPRIATE CHANNEL FOR U.S. REQUESTS FOR THE MOVEMENT OF ATOMIC BOMBS TO GOOSE BAY

1. As you know, in the attached Letter No. 3088 of December 2, Mr. Wrong reports that the U.S. authorities have asked what channel they should use in requesting, from time to time, permission to move atomic bombs to Goose Bay, apparently by air. I personally have no doubt that the civilian channel would be the correct one.[42] You or the Acting Minister may wish to discuss the problem with the Prime Minister. It will be noted that Mr. Wrong urges that he be given a decision on this point in the immediate future.

2. While it may be necessary in the immediate future to deal with a request for some bombs to be moved to Goose Bay for storage, as an isolated matter, I think we should reach an early agreement with the United States on the whole question of

(a) What use Strategic Air Command (SAC) bombers may make of Goose Bay in peace or war;

(b) What safety precautions should be applied to the movement and storage of all types of bombs in Canada; and

(c) Most important of all, arrangements to ensure that, in the event of an emergency, SAC bombing attacks from Canada will not be initiated without the prior approval of the Canadian Government.

It would be difficult, and I think dangerous, to attempt to deal with a request for the transfer of a small number of A-bombs to Goose without going into points (a) to (c), inclusive.[43]

3. At the November 21 meeting of Chiefs, it was agreed, in connection with the proposed appendix to the emergency defence plan regarding the provision of SAC bases in Canada, that the RCAF should obtain from the USAF the details of its plans with regard to the use of SAC bases in Canada and put them up to C.S.C. At the P.J.B.D. meeting on October 2-5, it was indicated that the U.S. authorities would shortly be putting forward their plans to the Canadian Government at a high level. I think we should ask Mr. Wrong to urge the Americans to put forward their full plans in the immediate future so that the matter may be considered as a whole.[44]

4. Attached is a memorandum of November 29 which outlines Washington's expected overall proposals (para. 2), and makes a preliminary attempt to define the conditions that Canada might attach to SAC use of bases in Canada. Paras. 9 to 12 deal with the difficult question of approval for the initiation of bombing attacks from Canada, and pages 8 to 11 contain the suggestions as to the conditions Canada might attach.

5. One or two comments on Mr. Wrong's letter and the memorandum attached to it:

(1) I understand that atomic bombs are of no real danger provided the nuclear components are detached, and that, by regulation, they are only attached when a plane is over a target area.

(2) As regards the last sentence of Mr. Wrong's paragraph 1, while Mr. Wrong was not asked to protest the dropping of the bomb in the St. Lawrence, you will recall making representations to Mr. Woodward.

(3) As regards the second sentence of Mr. Wrong's paragraph 2, this Division had no knowledge of the fact that the C.A.S. and, apparently, the Prime Minister had approved the movement by the 43rd Bomber Group of 11 A-bombs, minus nuclear components, to Goose in August.

(4) As regards the first sentence of the last paragraph on page 2 of the memorandum attached to Mr. Wrong's letter, it is our understanding that the storage facilities at Goose Bay are probably now ready, since their foundations were poured some time ago. This information may, of course, not be accurate, but if it is we may well receive a request to store bombs at Goose long before next spring.

Memorandum from Defence Liaison Division to Head, Defence Liaison Division

TOP SECRET [Ottawa], November 29, 1950

USE OF CANADIAN AIRFIELDS BY SAC BOMBERS

1. This memorandum contains a few personal and tentative ideas — based on incomplete information — as to the conditions that might have to be attached to the use of airfields in Canada by the Strategic Air Command of the USAF. When the expected proposals are received from Washington, the memorandum may be of some use as a starting point for discussion of the terms on which use of airfields in Canada might be permitted.

2. When Washington asks permission for SAC to use Goose (and possibly Harmon and Gander to some extent), its approach, when broken down, may be a request for blanket authority:

In Peace and War

(1) To station bomber units at Goose, etc. (It is not clear whether the USAF wants to go beyond basing tanker aircraft at Harmon and Gander. In this memorandum, "Goose, etc." refers to all airfields in Canada that SAC may want to use for bombers or bombs.)

(2) To have bomber units stationed at Goose, etc. conduct training flights wholly or partly in Canada.

(3) To move bombers back and forth, between foreign points, through Goose, etc. for purposes of deployment or re-deployment, and on training flights partly over Canada.

(4) To have bombers stationed at Goose, etc., or moving back and forth through Goose, etc., for purposes of deployment, re-deployment or training flights, free to make essential emergency landings at other airfields in Canada.

In War:

(5) To send bombers stationed at Goose, etc. on missions against enemy targets, and have them return to or through Goose, etc.

(6) To stage bombers through Goose, etc. for missions against enemy targets, and have them return to or through Goose, etc.

(7) To have bombers stationed at Goose, etc. that are sent on bombing missions, and bombers that are staged through Goose, etc. on bombing missions, free to make essential emergency landings at other airfields in Canada.

In Peace and War:

(8) To store all types of bombs at Goose, etc.

(9) In connection with the various types of movements mentioned in (1) to (7) above, to move bombers and all types of bombs to and through Goose, etc. with only advance notification to the RCAF (rather than Canadian Government approval in each case).

Washington might also ask permission for use of a remote practice bombing area by its bombers stationed at Goose, etc., including permission to carry live bombs between Goose, etc. and the area.

3. If the Government is disposed to permit use of airfields in Canada by SAC, one of its main problems will be to ensure that there will be no serious accident resulting from the carriage and storage of bombs in Canada, and at the same time to avoid hampering efficient operation of the bombers on training or in-transit flights, or on wartime bombing missions. Presumably the RCAF will have to be asked for a definitive statement on what bombs are likely to do under various conditions and how they are carried and stored, before a decision is reached as to the safety conditions that the Government should attach to use of airfields in Canada.

4. In the meantime, I have obtained the following preliminary information from the RCAF:

Conventional Bombs:

(a) Only 1 in a 1000 fully-armed, unfused bombs that are jettisoned or carried to ground in a crash will explode on impact. Such bombs could explode in a fire after a crash, and would have to be recovered if dropped in shallow water or on land as they become sensitive after a period of years. (Bombs are fused only at the moment of release over a target).

(b) Bombs lacking the exploder system, which is easily attached or removed only on the ground, would not explode if jettisoned, carried to ground in a crash, or burnt after a crash, but would have to be recovered if dropped in shallow water or on land since they become more sensitive.

(c) The RCAF and USAF apparently have very strict safety rules governing the storage of conventional bombs and their carriage by air or otherwise. The rules regarding their storage and surface transportation are probably such as to give no cause for anxiety.

(d) The RCAF carries fully-armed bombs, or those with the exploder system removed, only over fixed routes that avoid important centres, and releases fused and sand-ballast bombs only over approved target areas. On bomber training flights, one normally carries either practice (sand-ballast) bombs, which merely produce smoke on impact, or fully-armed bombs, and may train by (i) merely flying, (ii) carrying out mock attacks electronically without releasing bombs, or (iii) dropping bombs on an approved target area. Fully-armed bombs are normally carried by air only to a practice bombing area.

A-Bombs:

(e) Only fully-armed bombs will explode, and such bombs are only fully-armed when over a practice area or enemy target. If one or two components (easily attached or removed, on the ground or in the air) are carried separately in the regulation manner, neither the bomb nor the components can explode if jettisoned, exposed to fire, etc.

5. Thus, there is not really a great deal to fear from the carriage or storage of conventional bombs in Canada, and the carriage and storage of A-Bombs does not appear to present any safety problem.

6. As regards paragraph 2 above, which attempts to outline the probable U.S. proposals, the USAF would presumably have a real need to carry live conventional bombs (either fully-armed or with the exploder system removed, depending on the circumstances) over prescribed routes in Canada in the following circumstances:

(1) To and through Goose, etc. if additional bombs were required urgently at advance bases — e.g. if a war were imminent, if shortages of bombs developed at advance bases during a war, or if surface transportation to Goose, etc. or Europe were interrupted for any reason.

(2) Through Goose, etc. in war, for attacks on enemy targets and return to Goose, etc. — i.e. in order to cut down refuelling time at Goose, etc. on bombing missions starting from airfields in the U.S.

(3) From Goose, etc. to enemy targets and return to Goose, etc.

(4) From Goose, etc. to any approved practice area in Canada, possibly in Labrador.

7. Conditions regarding safety that might have to be attached to approval of use of Goose, etc. are outlined with other conditions, in paragraph 16 below.

8. Canada would presumably want to keep in its own hands the determination of (a) when the first air attacks may be launched from airfields in Canada; (b) when such attacks should be suspended or cease; and (c) when the whole SAC apparatus should be withdrawn from Canada.

9. As regards the question of the timing of the first bomber attack from Canada, SAC is under constant alert because it would, I understand, be of the utmost importance, militarily, to deliver the first Western air blow within the shortest possible number of hours after the first sign of an aggression giving rise to a general emergency. This would serve to dislocate the aggressor's war machine and would lessen the risk of SAC bombers, which would apparently be high-priority first-day targets, being caught on the ground. In the event of a general emergency, the Canadian Government might conceivably decide to exercise the right of "individual or collective self-defence" and not wait, before committing the country to war, for a Security Council or Assembly resolution calling for U.N. military action.[45] At the same time, it would presumably want to retain complete freedom to make up its own mind as to the exact time at which Canada should be committed to a war by SAC attacks from Canada (or by Canadian military action).[46]

10. After preliminary talks with LePan, I am inclined to feel that the only practical solution to this difficult aspect of the matter would be to have a very firm understanding that, at the outset of a general emergency, the President would have to consult the Prime Minister, presumably by telephone, as to whether attacks might be initiated from airfields in Canada. The President will, I imagine, retain personal control over the disposition of long-range bomber units and A-bombs. At present I can see no other realistic means of taking care of the two principal considerations that would arise in an emergency: on the one hand, the Canadian Government's need to determine the moment at which Canada is to be committed to a war; and on the other, the importance to all concerned of initiation of a Western air assault in the shortest possible time. It is, of course, impossible to anticipate whether or not, in a hypothetical case of aggression, the Canadian Government would consider it to be of a type to warrant the early commitment of Canada to a war, either through U.S. air attacks from Canada or warlike acts by the Canadian Armed Forces.

11. As regards the time at which bombing attacks from Canadian bases should be suspended during a war, or should cease towards the end of hostilities, I can see no alternative to our simply stipulating that we must retain the freedom to determine these dates.

[45] There would be no point in waiting if the U.S. had already flown and dropped A-Bombs from Canadian soil.

[46] There wouldn't be any such freedom once A-bombs were stored here.

12. I think our attitude may have to be the same with regard to the date on which SAC and its bomb stocks should be withdrawn from Canada. It is, of course, a question whether Washington would understand that SAC bombers and bombs are of some danger to us nationally and internationally, and that our timing for the initiation, suspension and cessation of bombing from airfields in Canada would not be likely to differ substantially from that of the U.S. authorities.[47]

13. You will recall that, under the 20-year lease for Goose Bay, as proposed at the March PJBD meeting, the U.S. Forces would have to consult us in advance of basing at Goose Bay any activities in or over Canadian territory. I doubt that we would need to give SAC permission to use Goose Bay for 20 years. A shorter period might perhaps be approved, subject to extension from time to time, if satisfactory to Canada. The provision just mentioned as proposed for inclusion in the Goose Bay lease arrangement would incidentally preclude the U.S. setting up long-range guided-missile installations or other unforeseeable long-range weapon installations at Goose Bay without Canadian consent.

14. If it is found that SAC wants to use Gander for more than the stationing of tanker aircraft, substantially the same conditions might be applied to that airfield as are applied to Goose Bay.

15. The exact purposes for which SAC wishes to use Harmon are not clear. If it wants to fly bombing missions from or through any of the Island leased bases, or to store unconventional bombs there, we might possibly have a case for applying substantially the same conditions to those bases as to Goose Bay and Gander, on the grounds that U.S. warlike operations conducted from and through bases in Canada would probably commit Canada to a war, and that such a situation and the storage of unconventional bombs at the leased bases was not contemplated by the signatories of the Bases Agreement. It is doubtful, however, that we would have any case for arguing that conventional aerial bombs may not be stored at the lease bases without specific Canadian permission. In a separate memorandum, I suggest that we take up with Legal Division and London the question of the U.S. Forces at the Island bases committing Canada to participation in a war, or to continued participation, through warlike acts carried out from and through the leased bases, as well as the question of the storage of unconventional bombs at the Island bases.

16. In view of the foregoing, on the basis of presently available information, it might be desirable to attach something like the following conditions to use of Goose Bay by SAC:

(1) Taking into account the conditions set forth in the U.S. proposals and those indicated below, U.S. bombers may use Goose Bay and the U.S. Government may store aerial bombs of all types there for a period of 10 years, subject to extension of this period if satisfactory to the Canadian Government, and to the reopening of the whole matter if at any time the Canadian Government considers that conditions are such as to render further use of Goose Bay by U.S. bombers unnecessary or undesirable.

(2) At the outset of any emergency, U.S. bomber attacks will in no circumstances be initiated from or through Goose Bay without the prior consent of the Canadian Prime Minister.[48]

(3) The Canadian Government reserves the right to decide, in the light of the international situation at the time, the date or dates after which U.S. bomber attacks may no longer be carried out, either temporarily or otherwise, from and through Goose Bay, as well as the date or dates after which U.S. bombers and aerial bombs may no longer be present at Goose Bay.

(4) During any period or periods that the Canadian Government permits U.S. conventional bombs to be carried to or through Goose Bay or to be stored there, no such bombs that are fully-armed or merely lack exploder systems may be carried by air in Canada (in connection with use of Goose Bay), except in the following circumstances:

(a) If additional supplies of such bombs are required urgently at Goose Bay or at bases outside of Canada, and either a general war appears imminent, or shortages of such bombs develop at Goose Bay or at bases outside of Canada during a war, or surface transportation to Goose Bay or bases outside of Canada is temporarily interrupted by any cause, such bombs may be carried by air to and through Goose Bay from the United States.

(b) If, in wartime, in order to reduce refuelling time at Goose Bay, it is essential for such bombs to be loaded in the United States aboard bombers proceeding through Goose Bay on missions against enemy targets, such bombs may be carried by air through Goose Bay and to Goose Bay on the return flight.

(c) Such bombs may be carried by air from Goose Bay and on the return flight to Goose Bay on wartime missions against enemy targets.

(d) Such bombs may be carried by air from Goose Bay to any approved practice bombing range in Canada and, when necessary, on the return flight to Goose Bay.

(e) When such bombs are being carried by air over Canada in the circumstances outlined in (a) to (d) above, and an emergency landing at another Canadian airfield is essential, the bombs may be carried to and from the airfield at which the emergency landing is made.

(f) The carriage of such bombs by air over Canada in the circumstances outlined in (a) to (d) above will in all cases be over previously approved routes.

(5) U.S. conventional bombs from which the exploder system has not been removed may not be carried in Canada (in connection with use of Goose Bay) by surface transportation or stored at Goose Bay.

(6) If any U.S. bombs that are fully-armed or merely lack exploder systems are jettisoned, involved in a crash, or otherwise abandoned in Canada, they will immediately be reported to the RCAF and the U.S. authorities will take prompt action to remove the bombs or render them completely harmless.

[48] Can[adian] Gov't?

(7) Any U.S. conventional bombs stored at Goose Bay will at all times be stored in such a way as to ensure that they are safe.

(8) During any period or periods that the Canadian Government permits United States atomic bombs to be carried to and through Goose Bay or to be stored there, such bombs will on no occasion be fully-armed while present in Canada or the Canadian air space, except when over or released in any practice bombing area approved by the Canadian Government. The RCAF will be informed immediately of any atomic bomb that does not explode when dropped over an approved practice bombing area in Canada, and the U.S. authorities will take prompt action to remove the bomb or render it completely harmless.[49]

(9) No U.S. conventional or atomic bombs may be dropped on any enemy targets in Canada without the express advance approval of the Canadian Prime Minister.

(10) (Here, one might add an appropriate formula for the division of responsibilities between Canada and the U.S. for the construction, manning and control of SAC facilities at Goose Bay. Possibly any of the formulae outlined in my recent memorandum on "Provision and Control of New U.S. Military Installations in Canada" might be used here, although Canada should perhaps try to make a substantial contribution to all USAF installations at Goose Bay in view of the great importance that the field there may have in due course from the point of view of international civil aviation and the development of northeastern Canada.)

17. The conditions to be applied to use of Gander and Harmon will of course depend in part on what SAC wants to do at those airfields, and what their position is at Harmon under the Leased Bases Agreement.

PERMANENT JOINT BOARD ON DEFENCE — RECOMMENDATION RE GOOSE BAY

Following from MacKay, Begins: Benninghoff wrote Eberts on December 15† asking whether we should not go ahead with discussion about the Goose Bay lease even though the Board's recommendation about the Newfoundland Bases Agreement had not yet been formally acted upon by the Canadian Government. I have replied today as below in a letter to Benninghoff through the U.S. Embassy here.

[49] ?

To speed up transmission, would you please give text of the letter informally to Benninghoff. Text of letter begins:

I refer to your letter to Chris Eberts of December 15† asking whether it would be desirable and possible to go ahead with arrangements for the Goose Bay lease although the Board's recommendations about the Newfoundland Bases have not yet been formally approved by the Canadian Government.

I am inclined to think that as soon as your people are prepared to present definite proposals regarding arrangements it would facilitate matters if they are to put them forward informally and let us have a look at them. We might in this way be able to clear away possible difficulties in advance of a formal request being made from your side and thus speed up completion of arrangements. Text of letter ends. Ends.

Following for MacKay from Ignatieff, Begins: Reference your EX-2723 concerning PJBD recommendation re Goose Bay, Benninghoff told me in a conversation today that the draft form of a lease was still being worked over by legal experts of the USAF, but he expected that the United States authorities would be in a position to submit a draft informally to the Canadian authorities within two weeks. He understands the letter included in your message under reference to mean that those concerned with this problem on the official level in Ottawa would be prepared to consider a United States draft form of a lease informally in advance of Canadian Government approval of the PJBD recommendations on the Newfoundland bases. He added that, meanwhile, construction, authorization for which was given in Department letter No. D.3376 dated October 25th, 1950, and conveyed verbally to the State Department, has gone forward at Goose Bay. AERIAL PHOTOGRAPHY OF CANADIAN CITIES

1. I would like to refer to your letter of June 16, 1950,† and to our previous correspondence on this subject.

2. The Chiefs of Staff have considered this matter and have agreed that there is no objection to the U.S.A.F. proposal, subject to the exercises being carried out under the following conditions:

(a) that copies of all photographs taken will be forwarded to the R.C.A.F.;

(b) that any photographs taken be given a high security classification and no distribution of such photographs will be made without prior reference to R.C.A.F. Headquarters; and

(c) that, while performing bombing and radar scope photography over Canadian cities, aircraft will fly at a high altitude and that no mass flights will at any time occur over Canadian cities.

3. The Chiefs of Staff also feel that the project falls within the scope of the approval given by the Minister of National Defence, as set out in the letter to General Walsh from Air Vice-Marshal James dated January 10, 1950.[50]

PROPOSED USAF TRAINING FLIGHTS IN CANADA AND AERIAL PHOTOGRAPHY OF CANADIAN CITIES

You said yesterday you might have a word with the CAS this morning about the attached letter of July 4 on the above subject.

2. I suggest you might take the line that the U.S. proposal goes very much farther than the proposal to which Mr. Claxton agreed last January.

3. The January proposal was that the USAF be permitted "to perform camera bombing and radar scope photography over Quebec, Winnipeg, Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, Sault Ste. Marie, and Churchill during the period of Strategic Air Command rotation to Goose Bay this winter."

4. The present proposal is that the USAF Strategic Air Command have permission to "overfly all Canada to and from the following SAC bases and the Canadian Arctic" (bases listed are in Louisiana, Texas, California, Georgia, Arizona, Florida, South Dakota, Washington, New Mexico), "flights to be initiated and terminated at above bases and Alaska except in emergency." They also ask for the right of vertical and radar scope photography over Calgary, Montreal, Vancouver, Churchill, Winnipeg, Quebec, Edmonton, Regina, Ottawa, and Toronto. Flights would consist of B-29, B-50, B-36 aircraft up to 45 planes in a flight. It is proposed to conduct flights on a year-round basis and permission is asked for an indefinite period.

4. The flights are said to be for training purposes to familiarize U.S. crews with flying conditions over the Arctic wastes. The present proposal seems to me to go so much farther than the January scheme that I feel very strongly that we must have both Mr. Claxton's and Mr. Pearson's express approval before authorizing it. The regular procedure for authorizing defence projects by the U.S. in Canada is for the Chiefs to secure the approval of the Minister and advise us accordingly before we approach our Minister.

5. With respect to the merits of the proposal, I am not of course competent to express any judgment on the technical side, since no doubt long training flights are necessary for Strategic Air Command, and no doubt training flights over the Arctic wastes are an advantage. Surely the RCAF have adequate photographic equipment to take pictures of Canadian cities. I cannot see very much advantage to the RCAF. I should think also that the U.S. Strategic Air Command would get as much practice out of bombing runs and radar scope photography of such runs over Chicago as over Toronto.

6. From a political standpoint, I feel that we should be cautious about authorizing the project. A flight of 45 6-engine bombers over any part of settled Canada could not escape public notice in Canada. Almost certainly the Kremlin would hear about it. This is a dangerous summer, and I do not think we should encourage anything that might tend to make the Canadian people or the Kremlin jittery. If we authorize flights at all, I should think that they should be restricted to a very small number of planes and that they should not be too frequent. I think also we should have a time limit.

III. UNITED STATES AIR OPERATIONS OVER CANADIAN TERRITORY

37. The Minister of National Defence reported that in August, 1950, the United States Section of the Permanent Joint Board on Defence had requested permission for the U.S. services to fly over Canadian territory as might be required in order to carry out effective interceptions of unidentified aircraft crossing the border from Canada into the United States. This requirement developed from the initiation of active operations in connection with the U.S. Air Defence Scheme. It was obvious that the very broad authority sought by the United States required certain definitions and limitations in order to be compatible with Canadian requirements. To this end officials of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport had drafted provisions which, while designed to permit the interception of unidentified aircraft, at the same time would not interfere with normal southbound flights from Canada to the United States. The Canadian Armed Forces had been advised that the U.S. military authorities were in agreement with the proposed limitations.

38. Mr. Claxton said the U.S. request appeared logical and justifiable and one to which we could hardly object. Nevertheless, as the proposals now stood they were one-way concessions in favour of the United States. Consideration might be given to making them reciprocal.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

39. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that the agreement should be framed right from the beginning on a reciprocal basis.

40. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed to recommend to Cabinet approval of the U.S. request for interception of unidentified aircraft over Canadian territory, subject to the restrictive clauses stipulated and subject to the extension of reciprocal concessions to Canada by the United States.

TELEGRAM WA-3009 Washington, November 21, 1950

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Mr. Drury from W.R. Wright, for delivery first thing Wednesday morning.

1. At the meeting on civil defence which took place on November 21st, it was agreed to issue a statement to the press here at about 10 a.m. on Wednesday, November 22nd, to be marked "for immediate release". The text of the press statement is given below.

2. The most important recommendation of the conference on civil defence was that a small joint civil defence planning group should be established, subject to approval by both Governments. The group would explore the problems involved in civil defence co-ordination between the two Federal Governments and the States and Provinces. It was thought that they should delegate such matters as customs and immigration, movement of doctors and nurses across the border, etc. to working groups of experts of the two countries who would report their findings back to the planning group.

3. It was also agreed that it would be useful to arrange the exchange of permanent civil defence officers, as is presently done by the three services. Worthington, on further consideration, believes he can usefully make someone available for assignment to the Civil Defence Office here. Similarly a United States civil defence officer would then be assigned to Ottawa.

4. There was a general and informative interchange of views on particular problems, such as the stage reached in the civil defence planning in particular fields by both countries.

5. Throughout the discussions, we took care to make no commitments which might fall within the competence of the Provinces, and it was agreed that the planning group, if set up, would go more thoroughly into the constitutional problems involved in civil defence coordination between the States and Provinces.

6. Following is the text of the press release:

Civil defense officials of the United States and Canada today recommended the establishment of a planning group to study civil defense problems shared by both countries.

Consideration was given to interchanging civil defense information, and plans, and a proposal to exchange permanent liaison officers.

The meeting was held in the Executive Office Building here between the top civil defense officials of both countries. It arose out of the series of conferences which have been held between civil defense representatives on the lower level. The United States group was headed by James J. Wadsworth, Acting Director, Civil Defense Office of the National Security Resources Board. The Canadian delegation was led by General F.F. Worthington, Civil Defense Coordinator.

Various aspects of civil defense were discussed by the conferees. Concerning problems common to both countries, it was agreed to recommend the creation of a special group to study such matters as coordination of mutual aid, standardization of equipment, organization of personnel and procedures to be followed.

Besides General Worthington, those in the Canadian group included A.L. Wright, Civil Defense Liaison; W.D. Matthews, Minister, Canadian Embassy, Washington; B.A. Wallis, Second Secretary, Canadian Embassy, and W.R. Wright, Department of National Defense, Ottawa.

In this United States group, besides Mr. Wadsworth, were Col. Barnet Beers, Assistant for Civil Defense Liaison, Office of the Secretary of Defense; H. Merrell Benninghoff, Officer in Charge of Dominion Affairs, Bureau of European Affairs, State Department; Hubert R. Gallagher, Head of State-Local Relations Group, Civil Defense Office; Samuel H. Sabin, Associate General Counsel, NSRB, and Frederick P. Hobart, Congressional Liaison, Civil Defense Office. Text ends.

PROPOSED U.S. NORTHEAST COMMAND

1. The U.S. Joint Chiefs of Staff have proposed the establishment of a U.S. Northeast Command located at Fort Pepperell. This would be a unified command for the purpose of facilitating planning and the technical employment of U.S. forces assigned to it.

2. The missions assigned to this command will be in consonance with the following two principles:

(a) maintenance of the security of the U.S. forces concerned;

(b) planning in concert with the Canadian forces for the defence of such parts of North America and the sea and air approaches thereto as may be agreed upon from time to time by the Governments of the United States and Canada.

3. The forces which the command would control would be:

(a) U.S. Air Force establishments in North-eastern Canada, Newfoundland and Greenland (at present under the U.S.A.F.'s Newfoundland Base Command);

(b) the Argentia base and U.S.N. bases in Greenland.

4. When this proposal was raised before it was indicated that the name of the command might be something like Northeast Command. Naturally, we preferred not to have this name used without any qualification as it would then tend to indicate that the command was over a geographical area which might be taken to include Canadian forces. As changed, it is considered that the same objection could not be made to the name. The matter, however, is referred to the Cabinet for noting, should there be any objection.[53]

Note de la Direction de liaison avec la Défense pour le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Defence Liaison Division to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], August 25, 1950

You will recall that, owing to the fact that U.S. coloured troops introduced venereal disease in the Northwest Territories and Yukon during the war and as the Government has feared misunderstandings on the part of the Provinces, it has been reluctant to permit U.S. negro units to undertake maintenance work at Mingan and Chimo, P.Q., and Frobisher Bay, Baffin Island, during recent summers. It refused permission with regard to the two air stations in Quebec, although it did, in the end, permit a unit of U.S. negro engineers to carry out maintenance work at Frobisher during the summer of 1949.

Air Vice Marshal James, Air Member for Air Plans and R.C.A.F. member, P.J.B.D., tells me that [Major] General [Lyman P.] Whitten, the General commanding U.S.A.F. units in Newfoundland and Quebec, raised an aspect of this matter when he paid a visit to R.C.A.F. Headquarters yesterday. Apparently, as a result of the U.S. Government's non-segregation policy, varying numbers of negro personnel are nowadays being included in all normal U.S.A.F. units with the result that, in recent weeks, General Whitten has already received some 45 negroes for postings in various units in Newfoundland. He has mentioned this fact to the Newfoundland authorities (including Mr. [Leslie Roy] Curtis, the Attorney General) and, while they are apparently not particularly happy about the situation, they have, understandably, not found it desirable to raise any objections.[54]

I gather that the Pentagon still realizes that prior approval would be required for postings in Canada of units of negro troops, but Air Vice Marshal James appeared to expect that, in the long run, a sizeable number of negro troops might be posted to the leased bases as members of normal U.S.A.F. units and appeared anxious to let the U.S.A.F. know whether this would be in order.

Possibly, you will feel that the question of mixed units being posted in Canada in future should go to Cabinet or that, in the case of the Province of Newfoundland, at least, a Federal Minister should discuss the matter with the provincial Premier. It is difficult to see how one can object to the use of mixed units for mutually agreed purposes in Canada without creating bad publicity for Canada in the United States.[55]

U.S. Atomic Energy Commission — New Contract

Mr. Bennett advised the meeting that deliveries on the current contract with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission would be completed as of December 31st, 1949. It was, therefore, proposed to enter into a new contract. In considering the quantity that should be offered for sale, an endeavour had been made to work out a balanced delivery for the period of the next three years, commencing January 1st, 1950. In order to accomplish this, it was Mr. Bennett's recommendation that the new contract should be for a quantity of 450,000 lbs. Mr. Bennett advised the meeting that he had had preliminary discussions with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission both with respect to quantity and price. The Commission was agreeable to the purchase of 450,000 lbs. With respect to price, Mr. Bennett advised the meeting that since the last contract had been signed, the Canadian dollar had been devalued by 10%. Mr. Bennett recalled to the meeting that the Uranium Black Oxide price under the current contract is $15.00 (Can. funds) which is being paid by the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission in equivalent United States dollars. This method of payment had been developed at the time of the renegotiation of Contract T-86. Under the original terms of that contract, payment was provided for in United States funds which were then at a premium. When the Canadian dollar went to par, the Company was faced with the possible loss of the premium inasmuch as its costs for selling purposes had been determined on the basis of the premium. The new clause was developed for future contracts in order to protect the company in the future against a similar contingency. Mr. Bennett pointed out that while the clause did protect the company from loss, it did not prohibit the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission from benefiting through the devaluation of the Canadian dollar. As a consequence, the balance of payments on the current contract were being made at the rate of approximately $13.50 (U.S. funds). It might be argued that in the next contract the Company should insist on payment at the rate of $15.00 (U.S. funds) which would result in a return of approximately $16.50 (Can. funds) per lb. Mr. Bennett pointed out that such an argument overlooked the fact that when the $15.00 price was negotiated there was considerable opposition to increasing the price from $13.50 to $15.00. The increase had only been agreed to when the Company outlined in general terms its costs. Since these costs had been stated in terms of Canadian dollars, it would be difficult at this juncture to ask for a price of $16.50 (Can. funds) per lb., unless of course it could be shown that costs had increased by $1.50 per lb. It was Mr. Bennett's view, therefore, that it would be a mistake to ask for $15.00 per lb. (U.S. funds). He did propose, however, to ask for some increase, since it could be anticipated that costs, particularly at the Refinery, would increase, due to devaluation. Mr. Bennett asked for the Board's approval of his entering into negotiations with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission for the sale of 450,000 lbs at a price of $15.51 (Can. funds), or $14.50 (U.S. funds).

WHEREUPON on motion duly made and seconded it was unanimously resolved

THAT Mr. W.J. Bennett be and he is hereby authorized to negotiate and conclude a contract with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission for the delivery of 450,000 lbs of Uranium Black Oxide with the same specifications and on the same general conditions as the present contract, at a price of $15.51 (Can. funds) or such other price as he at his discretion might decide.[56]

There being no further business, the meeting then adjourned.

Dear Mr. [Jesse C.] Johnson:

On March 24th Mr. G.C. Bateman, representing the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada, and I, met with you in Washington to discuss the possible establishment of special price provisions to encourage the production of uranium from properties which, because of grade or location, can not operate economically under the official Canadian minimum price. At our meeting we agreed upon a formula to be used as the basis for establishing such special prices. There is attached a memorandum containing the formula and the basis for purchasing ores under the formula.

It was the understanding that you would obtain the approval of the United States Atomic Energy Commission and that Mr. Bateman and I would obtain the approval of the Right Honourable C.D. Howe, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and the Atomic Energy Control Board. We indicated that in the event of approval being given to our agreement it was my intention to make a suitable announcement on April 18th in Toronto at the Annual Meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy. A copy of the proposed announcement is being sent to you under separate cover.†

We have obtained approval of the agreement subject to my obtaining an undertaking that, during the period extending to March 31st, 1958, the United States Atomic Energy Commission will purchase from Eldorado the Uranium Black Oxide which is refined from the material acquired under the terms of the formula; provided, however, that the price of such Uranium Black Oxide delivered to the United States Atomic Energy Commission or its agent shall not exceed a price to be established between Eldorado Mining and Refining (1944) Limited and the

A formula for determining the price to be paid for the U_3O_8 content of concentrates has now been devised which is based upon four factors:

1. $2.75 a pound for the average U_3O_8 content of the ore or mill feed.
2. A milling allowance of $7.25 per ton of ore milled.
3. A Maximum price based on a mill head of 0.25% U_3O_8.
4. A minimum extraction of 70%.

Eldorado will purchase, f.o.b. rail, acceptable concentrates which normally will be required to contain a minimum uranium content equivalent to 10% by weight of uranium oxide (U_3O_8) and will pay for the U_3O_8 content at a price per pound determined in accordance with the following formula:

The price per pound to be paid for the U_3O_8 content of acceptable concentrates containing 10% or more by weight of U_3O_8 shall be the product obtained by multiplying the average number of pounds of U_3O_8 per ton of mill feed by $2.75 per pound, adding to this a milling allowance of $7.25 per ton of ore milled and dividing the sum of the two by 70% of the average number of pounds of U_3O_8 per ton of mill feed.

The maximum price per pound for uranium oxide which will be paid under this arrangement is that based upon the formula applied to an ore with an average grade of .25 percent or five pounds per ton.

The price includes all radioactive elements in the ores and concentrates, but consideration will be given to the commercially recoverable value of non-radioactive constituents by payment therefor or by the return of the residues containing such constituents.

As the price is based upon the average grade, Eldorado reserves the right to adjust the contract from time to time, but without changing the formula in order that the contract will be in conformity with actual mine results.

SECRET Washington, April 7, 1950

Dear Mr. Bennett:

This is in reply to your letters of March 31[57] and April 3, 1950, and draft of announcement to be made by the Right Honourable C.D. Howe, Minister of Trade and Commerce, with reference to the extension of the period of the guarantee, and your announcement, regarding a special schedule for the purchase of high-cost low-grade uranium ores.

The proposed draft of the public announcement of the new price schedule, in our opinion, accurately and satisfactorily describes the formula as developed at our meeting on March 24 for determining the price the Eldorado Mining & Refining (1944) Limited will pay for the U_3O_8 content of ores and concentrates under the new schedule. We see no objections to such announcements.

Your letter of April 3 requests a statement concerning the Commission's willingness to buy uranium black oxide produced from material acquired by Eldorado under the new schedule. I am authorized to advise you that the Commission is prepared to purchase from Canada all the uranium produced under this program through March 31, 1958, up to a total of 8,000 tons, and under a ceiling price for black oxide of $10.00 (U.S. currency) per pound of U_3O_8 content. Appropriate contracts will be made from time to time.

It is understood that the price to be paid by the Commission will not exceed the ceiling price of $10.00 described in the above paragraph and will be established by Eldorado on the basis of the price paid producers by Eldorado in accordance with the proposed formula, plus freight, refining and handling charges. It is also our understanding that the ceiling price of $10.00 (U.S. currency) per pound of U_3O_8 relates to a black oxide comparable in quality to that which we have been receiving under our contracts with Eldorado.

Also we understand that you will confirm by letter that Eldorado is prepared to sell the Commission, under the conditions mentioned above, all the uranium produced in Canada under the guaranteed buying schedule except such quantities as the Canadian Government may desire to retain for its own use.

Sincerely yours,

JESSE C. JOHNSON

I have your letter of April 7th in reply to my letters of March 31st and April 3rd in the matter of the establishment of a special schedule for the purchase of high-cost low-grade uranium ores and the extension of the period of the guarantee.

I note that the proposed announcements to be made by the Right Honourable C.D. Howe, Minister of Trade and Commerce, and myself are satisfactory to you. I note further that the United States Atomic Energy Commission is prepared to purchase all the uranium which may be produced under the new buying program through March 31st, 1958, up to a total of 8,000 tons, and under a ceiling price for black oxide of $10.00 (U.S. currency) per pound of U_3O_8 content. I have advised the Right Honourable C.D. Howe of the Commission's undertaking and he has now given his approval of the adoption of the special price formula.

With reference to the final paragraph of your letter, this is to confirm that we will sell to the United States Atomic Energy Commission all the uranium produced in Canada under the guaranteed buying schedule, up to a total of 8000 tons, and for the period ending March 31st, 1958, except such quantities as the Canadian Government may desire to retain for its own use.

Dear Mr. Bennett:

I have your letter of April 12th further to your letter of April 1st in the matter of the discussions which you and Mr. G.C. Bateman have been carrying with the United States Atomic Energy Commission with respect to the establishment of a special price formula for the purchase of uranium in ores and concentrates in Canada. I note that you have now received from Mr. Jesse C. Johnson, Manager of Raw

TELEGRAM WA-1160 Washington, May 20, 1950

Following for Robertson from Wrong, Begins: In connection with the agreement recently reached with the United States Atomic Energy Commission on a new price formula to govern the purchase of uranium in Canada, we have had an inquiry from the British Embassy through [F.W.] Marten, the United Kingdom Joint Secretary of the C.P.C., upon instructions from the Foreign Office, for any information that we might give them in respect to this price formula and for any background information regarding reasons for the change as compared with the price previously set.

2. In explaining this inquiry, we were told that the United Kingdom Government, of course, recognizes that the original buying price quoted by Canada, the United Kingdom and United States was not discussed in the C.P.C. or the C.D.A., but each country was careful to keep within the Belgian contract price. Moreover, the United Kingdom Government, being an equal partner with the U.S.A. in the Belgian Congo contract and in the current negotiations with South Africa for the supply of uranium, believes that these prices might be affected as a result of the new price formula and that it may be necessary, in consequence, to adjust the United Kingdom buying price to the new price which may be offered for lower grade ores in Canada. Apparently the United Kingdom authorities believe that they should have at least been informed before the new price formula was agreed in Washington and given an opportunity to comment on the proposal before the transaction was completed.

3. As the British Embassy is under instruction to put these views to us, I should like to have your guidance as to the reply which we should make, together with any information which might be passed on to the United Kingdom authorities.

4. Incidentally, we learned from Marten that Sengier[58] of Union Minière sent an inquiry to Carroll Wilson of the Atomic Energy Commission about the new price formula and that Carroll Wilson has sent an explanation in reply to the effect that the new price was arrived at to meet special conditions in Canada and the United States and should not be regarded as affecting, in any way, the price arrangements with Union Minière. Ends.

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

TOP SECRET Ottawa, June 8, 2950

CHALK RIVER PILE

At yesterday's meeting of the Advisory Panel on Atomic Energy, Dr. Mackenzie made an important "off-the-record" statement about the prospect of constructing a second and larger pile at Chalk River.

2. As you know, the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission have already purchased twelve rods irradiated at Chalk River. They seem satisfied with their quality and Dr. Mackenzie is pleased at the price they are prepared to pay. At this price, Dr. Mackenzie estimates, we could afford to build a second pile of about twenty times the power of our present Chalk River pile and pay for it over a four or five year period by selling its production of plutonium to the United States Atomic Energy Commission.

3. For their part, the U.S.A.E.C. have indicated informally that they are prepared to consider cancelling one of their pile projects and placing a long-term contract with Chalk River for the production of plutonium.

4. Although Dr. Mackenzie does not expect that a second pile could be in production before 1954, he thinks that it may be necessary within the next month or so for the Government to reach a decision as to whether or not a Canadian plant for the production of heavy water should be built, as it would take longer to get the heavy water production underway than it would to construct the pile which would use it. Dr. Mackenzie has in mind a site at Calgary and does not think it would be possible to expand the facilities at Trail, B.C., now operated by the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company, as their production is fully committed to the United States

Edgar E.B. Sengier, Chairman of Executive Committee of Union Minière du Haut Katanga.

(apart from a small quantity earmarked for the present pile at Chalk River) and the site is already fully developed and could not readily be expanded.

5. Dr. Mackenzie has told Mr. Howe that he thinks a heavy water plant would probably cost between two and three million dollars and Mr. Howe has indicated his willingness to have the project discussed in Cabinet Defence Committee.

6. The decision to build a heavy water plant at Calgary would, of course, imply a decision to construct a second pile at Chalk River, which in turn hinges on whether the United States would be prepared to buy our production of plutonium at an economic price. While he is in Washington on atomic security talks from June 19th to 22nd, Dr. Mackenzie will probably have an opportunity of discussing a plutonium contract with Mr. Carroll Wilson, General Manager of the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission.

7. So far, the role of Canada in the field of atomic energy has been that of primary producer of raw materials. We have also made an important contribution to basic research in nuclear physics and we have at Chalk River a pile which is the finest of its kind in the world, but which does not develop anything like the power necessary for research on atomic power development. It is now proposed that we should add to our role as primary producer and researcher that of secondary producer — that we should develop the industrial plant necessary for the production of plutonium at an economic unit cost. The size of the proposed second pile has been calculated so as to give us the most economical rate of production of the substance which, so far as we can see, will be the most important lasting asset in an atomic age, whether for peace or war — plutonium.

8. Some of the principal arguments in favour of the development of a second pile are:

(a) We cannot count on the present Chalk River pile lasting much longer. It may remain servicable for years, but our scientists can give no guarantee that it may not become contaminated by a slight accident or miscalculation at any time. Therefore, if we are to stay in the atomic research field, in which we already have a good start, we need a second pile.

(b) We need a second pile also for the production of plutonium which we should otherwise have to buy from the United States. Our present pile is too small to be an economic producer, but from its operation we have learned enough, Dr. Mackenzie believes, to produce plutonium in quantity at least as cheaply as the Americans can because our heavy water process has turned out to be more efficient than the methods they have developed so far.

(c) The alternative policy of allowing our present pile to wear out without replacement would leave us wholly dependent on U.S. secondary production, research and development, while they would, in future years, be only partially dependent, if at all, on our uranium ores.

(d) With the prospect of the development in a few years time of re-cycling processes which will make it possible to get much more out of uranium than we do at present, it would be greatly to our advantage to enter the field of industrial production ourselves, and keep in Canada as high a proportion of our uranium production as possible to be reworked by more efficient methods in future years.

(e) Although the proposed second pile would not be a tool for research on atomic power development, it would enable us to increase our engineering and scientific skills so that, when the day comes when atomic power is a practical proposition, we should be better equipped to take full advantage of the opportunities it will offer.

9. I should not like you to regard this memorandum as a definitive review of the technical arguments. Dr. Mackenzie will, I suppose, put forward his own memorandum when the time comes for Cabinet Defence Committee to consider the question of heavy water development at Calgary and the construction of a second pile at Chalk River. This memorandum is simply a review of Dr. Mackenzie's statements on this subject at recent meetings of the Atomic Energy Panel so that you will have an outline of his proposition in mind. If there are any aspects of the problem that you would like us to examine in greater detail, we should, of course, be glad to do so.

Dear Mr. Wrong:

In your message WA-1160 of May 20th, you asked what information might be given to the United Kingdom Embassy in Washington in response to their request for more information about the new price formula governing the purchase of uranium in Canada.

The new formula was developed by Eldorado in consultation with the Advisory Committee of Mining and Exploration of the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada, and announced by Mr. W.J. Bennett, President of Eldorado, in a statement made on April 18, 1950, at the Annual Meeting of the Canadian Institute of Mining and Metallurgy in Toronto. Three copies of Mr. Bennett's speech are attached.† I am advised by Mr. Bennett that the formula is simply an amplification of the price formula announced in April, 1948. In the original formula, a base price was established and it was also provided that under certain conditions, higher prices might be paid. In the new formula, the conditions governing the payment of higher prices were laid down and a limit was established on the amount which might be paid. It was considered necessary to clarify the special price provisions of the purchasing policy as confusion on this point was retarding the search for uranium. The results of prospecting activities in the two-year period since the first announcement of purchasing policy were such as to indicate that uranium would never be produced under the old "special price" arrangement.

As regards the participation of the United States Atomic Energy Commission in the arrangement, I am informed that prior to the announcement of April, 1948, consultation took place between the Raw Materials Division of the United States Atomic Energy Commission and the Advisory Committee on Mining and Exploration of the Atomic Energy Control Board of Canada. Such consultation was considered desirable because the United States Atomic Energy Commission was at that time also considering the adoption of a domestic purchasing policy for the United States. The similarity of mining conditions in the two countries indicated the wisdom of joint consultations. Similarly, when the Advisory Committee on Mining and Exploration began its review of the Canadian policy early in 1950, consultations were again arranged between the Advisory Committee and the Raw Materials Division of the United States Atomic Energy Commission. In this connection, it should be noted that the United States Atomic Energy Commission has had in effect for some time a price formula similar in character to the new Canadian formula which is designed to stimulate production from low grade deposits.

You might point out to the British Embassy that when Mr. Bennett and Mr. Bateman were consulting the United States Atomic Energy Commission about the price formula prior to its announcement, Mr. Bateman told Mr. Eaton of the British Embassy what was proposed. He also suggested subsequently, in a letter to Mr. Jesse Johnson of the Raw Materials Division of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, that he have a talk with Mr. Eaton about the new formula and he believes that Mr. Johnson gave Mr. Eaton a copy of the new Eldorado formula to be applied. In addition, Mr. Bennett sent a copy of his speech to the United Kingdom High Commissioner's Office, as well as to the Belgian Embassy who asked for copies. It seems to us, therefore, that Eldorado has kept the United Kingdom authorities, here and in Washington, reasonably well informed of their consultations with the United States Atomic Energy Commission about the new price formula.

Yours sincerely,

TOP SECRET AND PERSONAL Ottawa, June 19, 1950

Dear Hume [Wrong]:

I have just sent an official reply to your message WA-1160 of May 20th asking what information you could give to the British Embassy about the new Eldorado price formula. For your own information, I should like to add to what I said in my official letter which was worded so that you would be able, if you wished, to give a copy of it to the British Embassy.

After the Panel discussion which you attended, [James] George spoke to Bennett who in turn consulted both Mr. Howe and George Bateman. The reply we sent you was largely drafted by Bennett who went on to explain why he did not think it was wise to be more specific in replying to the British Embassy's request for further information. At the risk of telling you what you already know, I shall pass on to you what Bennett said.

Bennett thinks the British Embassy in Washington would like not only to be kept informed but to be consulted in any important discussions of policy between Eldorado and the United States Atomic Energy Commission. We have not consulted them, although we have kept them informed, because we have maintained,

(a) that our uranium is not subject to C.D.A. allocation;

(b) that Eldorado is a private Company dealing directly with the United States Atomic Energy Commission;

(c) that the conditions of mining operations on the North American Continent are very similar and indeed many of the companies operating in the Colorado Plateau have interests in Canada so that similar policies have to be applied in the two countries; and,

(d) the United Kingdom does not have a domestic mining problem, but has only to consider the development of mines in Portugal and the Belgian Congo.

There is, of course, no new contract between Eldorado and the United States Atomic Energy Commission. The only contract is the one originally negotiated with Eldorado before its stock was expropriated by the Government, and that contract, with modifications as to price, is essentially the same as the one now in effect covering the production of Eldorado Yellowknife mine. Although there is no contract for Eldorado's additional production, and the further production that may be stimulated by the new price formula they have announced, Eldorado have a "gentlemen's agreement" with the United States Atomic Energy Commission to buy their full production at an economic price for the next eight years.

The new Eldorado price formula is, like the U.S. price formula which includes an important allowance for vanadium production, calculated on a sliding scale in order to encourage production which could not be attracted at the basic price of $2.75 a pound. Working out their formula, Eldorado was not unmindful of the possibility that it might be used by, for example, the Belgian Government in pressing for a higher price in their negotiations with the U.S. and U.K Governments. For this reason, the formula was devised in such a way that if it were applied to the very high-grade production of Union Minière, they would, in all probability, receive less for their uranium than they do under their present contract price with the United States Atomic Energy Commission.

Eldorado's general position on these matters is, therefore, to work as closely with the British as they can, and give them as much information as they can, without disclosing the details of their business negotiations as a private company on a United States Atomic Energy Commission contract.

Yours sincerely,

[N.A. ROBERTSON]

My dear Colleague,

I am bringing to your attention a recommendation from Dr. C.J. Mackenzie, President of the National Research Council, that a second production pile be built at the Government's Atomic Energy Project at Chalk River, at an estimated cost of $26,451,000.00.

This project has been under consideration for the past two years. There is no doubt that a second pile is required, as the life of the first pile is uncertain and is presently estimated at about ten years. Plutonium presently being produced at Chalk River is being sold to the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission, but production from the present pile is not on a scale to make the present project self-supporting. You will appreciate that the present installation was intended to be an experimental project rather than a production installation.

I have taken the stand that the Government would not build a second production pile unless it could be demonstrated that the project will be self-liquidating financially. Therefore, Dr. Mackenzie has been negotiating with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission for a sale of the product on a basis that will liquidate not only the new pile, but the existing pile and townsite over a period of ten years.

The U.S. Atomic Energy Commission have now accepted in principle Dr. Mackenzie's proposal that the Commission will buy all plutonium produced at Chalk River at a price between $170,000 and $180,000 per kilogram. It may be noted that a price of $145,000 per kilogram will permit the Government to amortize the new plant over ten years, and that a price of $175,000 per kilogram would allow the Government to amortize past expenditures as well as future expenditures over the same period.

The project will call for an expenditure of $7,000,000.00 per year over three years for construction, and a further amount of $6,000,000.00 for heavy water and uranium for delivery when the plant is ready for operation.

I enclose Dr. Mackenzie's report[59] to me on this project, and will appreciate your consideration and advice as to whether you, as Minister of Finance, can support this project if it is presented to the Governor-in-Council.

Yours sincerely,

SECRET Ottawa, October 14, 1950

My dear Colleague:

I have studied your letter of September 16 and the enclosed recommendation and report from the President of the National Research Council, concerning a second pile to be built at the Atomic Energy Project at Chalk River for the production of plutonium, at an estimated cost of $26,451,000.

I have noted what you and Dr. Mackenzie say regarding the necessarily uncertain future of the life of the present and much smaller pile, and of the possibilities of liquidating the costs of this second pile from the sales of plutonium to the United States Atomic Energy Commission. In view of these facts and the importance of Canada maintaining an active role in this highly important scientific field, I would be prepared to support this proposal when you present it to the Cabinet.

I feel I should point out that this second pile would appear to be directed primarily to the production of plutonium for military purposes and any other purposes for which the United States would be using it, rather than for research, and I assume that we can regard our expenditures on this project as in the nature of defence expenditures, with due allowance for the receipts we shall be getting from the United States. I assume that in making this recommendation you feel that the use of critical materials and highly skilled manpower that will be necessary for this project is justified in relation to the other defence uses that could be made of them. Naturally we do not have in the Department of Finance the detailed information that would be necessary for us to come to any independent judgment as to the military value of additional plutonium production in relation to other efforts.

I should perhaps add that Mr. Bryce, after discussing the matter with me, has already told Dr. Mackenzie that I was prepared to support this project.

Yours truly,

D.C. ABBOTT

I. RESUMPTION OF TRIPARTITE TALKS[60]

1. Dr. Solandt reported that he had recently been in Washington and that he and Mr. Ignatieff had discussed with Mr. Arneson the possibility of tripartite discussions being resumed. Mr. Arneson had told them that the U.S. approach to the problem had undergone a considerable change during the past year. They were now primarily concerned with the military aspects rather than the purely scientific ones, and the policy paper that was now being considered in Washington had been drafted in the Pentagon. He thought that the U.S. Government's position, which would not be defined for about a month, would probably leave the U.K. free to continue their weapons programme at its present level, but the proposals for the allocation of raw materials, in which the United States were primarily interested, would not give the U.K. sufficient supplies for any expansion of their programme. It seemed probable, according to Mr. Arneson, that there would be less emphasis in the U.S. proposals this year on the setting up of an integrated weapons programme, in view of the security difficulties that had arisen during the past year that would make Congress reluctant to sanction a completely full exchange of information and personnel between the U.S. and U.K. atomic projects.

2. The U.S. military authorities were thinking more and more of the tactical possibilities of the atomic bomb, and their proposals for a joint programme would probably relate to the tactical rather than the strategic use of the bomb. The R.A.F., according to their Chief of the Air Staff, attached the greatest possible importance to securing a stockpile of bombs to enable them to fulfill their role in the defence of Western Europe; the U.K. Chiefs apparently thought that they could persuade their Government to give up their weapons programme if that were necessary to get bombs.

[60] Les échanges tripartites sur les questions nucléaires ont pris fin abruptement lorsque Klaus Fuchs, un scientifique britannique qui avait effectué des recherches sur les armes nucléaires aux États-Unis et au Royaume-Uni, a été arrêté en février 1950 pour espionnage au profit de l'Union soviétique. Tripartite exchanges on atomic questions ended abruptly when Klaus Fuchs, a British scientist who had worked on atomic weapons research in the United States and the United Kingdom, was arrested in February 1950 for spying for the Soviet Union.

3. The U.S. authorities would probably be prepared to give bombs to the U.K., subject to a satisfactory allocation of raw materials, but it was not contemplated in the U.S. paper that bombs should be made anywhere but in the United States, although the U.S. would see no objection to the U.K. weapons research and development progress continuing. As soon as an agreement was concluded, bombs could be turned over to the U.K. against future deliveries of British plutonium, which would be blended in the United States. The number of bombs given to the U.K. would depend on the U.K.'s production of plutonium.

4. Mr. Robertson and Mr. Heeney commented that it was a pity that the U.S. Administration saw no way of reaching a tripartite agreement of this character without amending the McMahon Act, as the legislation might have a difficult passage in the new Congress.

5. The principal subjects on which Canadian thinking should be clarified before tripartite discussions were resumed, probably early in the new year, Dr. Solandt thought, were

(a) The possibility of establishing in Canada a joint atomic proving ground; and

(b) The possibility of storing bombs in Canada, either for our own use or for the use of the U.S.A.F.

6. As regards the first problem, Dr. Solandt said that he had been told by Mr. Arneson and Admiral Parsons in Washington that the U.S. authorities were not satisfied with their present proving ground at Eniwetok, and had decided as a temporary measure to choose a site in the Aleutians. After last year's tripartite negotiations had broken down, the U.K. authorities had begun to think about the possibility of finding an alternative proving ground, probably in Australia but possibly in Canada, should it prove impossible to reach agrement with the Americans for a joint proving ground. Since then, Mr. Penny had visited Canada and had found a site he considered suitable South of Churchill. It had been made perfectly clear to Mr. Penny that the facilities provided during his visit to Canada did not imply any kind of prior commitment to such a project on the part of the Canadian authorities. Very rough estimates of the cost of making a suitable proving ground in the area under consideration had arrived at a figure of $5,000,000; so far as personnel requirements were concerned, approximately 500 men might be required on the proving ground during trials.

7. Mr. Robertson asked whether, if the project were eventually approved, the area could not be used as a general testing ground for Air Force purposes, including atomic tests; it would then be easier to administer, and it might provide better security.

8. AVM Miller thought there would be little inconvenience, from an administrative point of view, in establishing a proving ground solely for atomic tests, and that the psychological reaction in Canada would probably tend to make both the Services and the public more aware that the bomb was our problem too. Dr. Solandt also pointed out that by having the proving ground in Canada we might learn more about the effects of atomic weapons, which would be valuable for our civil defence programme.

9. Dr. Mackenzie and AVM Miller pointed out that, now that people were becoming more concerned about the hydrogen bomb, and the U.S. had apparently enough bombs to consider tactical as well as strategic uses, the atomic bomb was coming more and more to be considered in the category of ordinary weapons of war, and having a proving ground in Canada might dispel some of the "mystique" in the attitude of our people towards the bomb. Dr. Solandt added that our willingness to have a proving ground in Canada might improve our position in the Combined Policy Committee and avoid the necessity which might arise, if a fourth country were approached, of negotiating a "special position" for it, such as has been demanded by the South Africans and the Belgians.

10. The Panel agreed with Mr. Robertson's observation that the Canadian Government would probably not be prepared to consider establishing a proving ground in Canada solely for the use of the U.K., if the U.K. Government were unable to reach agreement with the U.S. Government on the use of a joint proving ground. The only condition on which the Canadian Government might consider such a proposal sympathetically would probably be if both the U.S. and U.K. Governments were to ask us to establish a joint testing area on the grounds that it would be close enough to both countries for administrative convenience and economy, and yet in a sufficiently remote area where there would be a minimum of dislocation to the life of the area. We should not, however, initiate any programme or proposal for the establishment of an atomic proving ground in Canada.

11. As regards the possibility of bombs being stored in Canada, Dr. Solandt reported that Mr. Arneson had thrown out a suggestion which he might or might not have meant to be taken seriously, that the Canadian Government might wish to have bombs stored in Canada for its own use. Mr. Heeney reminded the Panel that there had already been discussions with the U.S. Air Force and the State Department about the future use of Goose Bay,[61] and Cabinet had agreed that the Minister of National Defence might have further discussions on this subject with the U.S. authorities. Mr. Robertson did not know whether this problem would be approached more easily on the basis of our North Atlantic partnership, in which the United States had already been given the strategic air role, or as a joint exercise in Canada-U.S. co-operation.

12. Dr. Mackenzie then raised a third subject of interest to Canada that might be considered during tripartite discussions. He said that the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission would probably reach a decision in a week regarding the price which they would be prepared to pay for Canadian plutonium production. They had already agreed in principle to purchase our production, after we had assured them that they would be getting just as much from us, whether they purchased it in the raw or the finished state. The proposed contract with the U.S. Atomic Energy Commission appeared very satisfactory from our point of view, as the unpredictable factors in price — those depending on U.S. supply — were taken care of by "escalator" clauses providing that if American prices on, for instance, heavy water, were increased, the price of our plutonium would be raised. Dr. Mackenzie had formed the impression that the U.S. authorities welcomed Canadian competition, as they did not have domestic competition. He thought that any profits that might accrue from our production could be put back into the Chalk River project, and that this would enable the annual Government outlay for the project to remain at its present level instead of being increased during the next 10 years of uncertainty in the development of industrial uses of atomic energy.

13. The Panel noted the reports of Dr. Solandt and Dr. Mackenzie, and agreed that there should be a further meeting after the U.S. paper proposing the resumption of tripartite negotiations had been circulated to the Canadian and U.K. Governments.

II. C.D.A. NEGOTIATIONS WITH SOUTH AFRICA AND BELGIUM

14. The Panel noted the Washington reports of these negotiations that had been circulated.

15. Mr. Robertson said that in Mr. Howe's absence he had advised Mr. Wrong that he was sure Mr. Howe would have no objection to the C.D.A. appointments which had been proposed.

III. UNITED NATIONS DEVELOPMENTS

16. The Acting Secretary reported on various developments during the present session of the U.N. General Assembly bearing on the problem of the international control of atomic energy — President Truman's proposal for a joint disarmament commission, the "uniting for peace" resolution, and Mr. Vyshinsky's ambiguous statements on inspection and control.

17. Mr. Robertson thought that the Americans might have — or at least should have — in mind the desirability of merging the disarmament discussion into one commission immediately, if there were any likelihood at all of the Russians accepting the majority plan for the control of atomic energy. If there were to be atomic disarmament without any steps towards disarmament of conventional weapons, he said, it would create a very serious strategic imbalance in favor of the Soviet Union at the present time. In a few years, the West might have built up its strength in conventional forces to the point where there would be less danger, but at the present time it was still true that the increasing U.S. stockpile of atomic weapons was the principal balancing factor in the strategic picture, so that any atomic treaty would have to be combined with a measure of conventional disarmament.

ATOMIC ENERGY; FURTHER DEVELOPMENT OF CHALK RIVER PLANT

11. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said that the Atomic Energy Control Board had recommended construction of a new pile at the Chalk River plant to ensure continuity and permanence in the research programme relating to atomic energy. The estimated total expenditure involved would be $26.5 million. Of this total, approximately $1 million would be required during the current fiscal year, $7 million in 1951-52, $10 million in 1952-53 and $9 million in 1953-54. Construction could not be finally completed and the reactor in operation before December 1953. Operation of the new pile would result in an excess of plutonium beyond the requirements of the Chalk River research programme but it had been ascertained that this excess could be sold at a satisfactory price to the United States Atomic Energy Commission. The revenues from such sales would be applied against amortization of the capital cost of construction of the new reactor and would also cover foreseeable additional expenditures arising out of the increased research programme. Consequently, it was estimated that the provision of a new pile would not result in any increase in the annual budget for atomic energy research.

12. Mr. Howe said that the proposed expansion at Chalk River was desirable not only from a defence point of view but because of the purely commercial uses which were gradually being found for atomic energy. It should be noted, in this connection, that an atomic propellent was being used experimentally at the present time in submarines.

13. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that the Atomic Energy Control Board be authorized to enter into all necessary contracts and make all necessary commitments for the purpose of providing a new reactor at Chalk River as recommended by the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

2. FUTURE ACTION

The Chairman drew attention to the adjournment on May 10 of hearings on the 1941 Agreement before the Public Works Committee of the United States House of Representatives. This meant that no action would be taken by the United States Congress this year. Three courses were open to the Canadian Government:

(a) To wait another year in the hope that the 82nd Congress might approve the Agreement in 1951;

(b) to press for development of power alone in the International Rapids section;

(c) to press for development of power in the International Rapids section and undertake simultaneous construction of an all-Canadian deep waterway as far as Lake Erie.

It might be desirable to set out these courses, together with an outline of the considerations involved, in a memorandum for the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy. Such a memorandum would not need to include a recommendation; the important thing was to bring these possible courses of action to the attention of the Ministers concerned. Estimates of the cost of an all-Canadian waterway under various assumptions had been completed and were included in the paper "Possible Future Action" which had been circulated to members of the Interdepartmental Committee. The Ontario application for separate power development had been in our hands for two years and had not been acted upon. If the Niagara Treaty did not come into force this year, strong pressure for the separate power scheme could be expected from Ontario.

Mr. Robertson agreed that the implications of the time factor should be brought to the attention of Ministers.

The Chairman asked what effect a further delay would have on the development of Labrador iron ore.

Mr. McLeod said that the full development of the ore would be delayed, although some development would still take place without the Waterway.

Mr. Robertson asked when the St. Lawrence power was expected to be needed.

The Chairman replied that Mr. Saunders had said that the Ontario Hydro would need St. Lawrence power by 1957 whether or not Niagara power could be made available in the meantime.

The Committee agreed that a memorandum along the lines suggested by the Chairman should be prepared for the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy. The Secretary was directed to prepare a first draft for the consideration of members of the Interdepartmental Committee.

FUTURE ACTION ON THE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

Enclosed is a copy of a draft memorandum for the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy which is being considered by the Interdepartmental Committee on Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Development.

2. I should be glad to have any comments or suggestions you might wish to make on this draft memorandum. I should particularly appreciate your views on paragraphs 2 and 9.

3. If the Canadian Government were to make a public statement to the effect that they would have to consider the construction of an all-Canadian Waterway if the United States Congress had not approved the 1941 Agreement by the end of 1951, do you think such a statement would make Congress more likely or less likely to take action in 1951 to approve the 1941 Agreement?

4. I wonder whether you have any idea what effect the additional expenditure of $10 billions on defence is apt to have on the prospects of Congressional approval of the 1941 Agreement. There would appear to be a possibility that, faced with such heavy expenditures, Congress might not wish to see any manpower and materials devoted to St. Lawrence construction. On the other hand, the advantages of the Waterway, and the necessity of the power, for defence purposes, might lead Congress to give early approval to the project. It would be helpful to know which of these considerations is likely to weigh more heavily with Congress. I do not think there would be any harm in your consulting the State Department on this one point. On the preceding questions, however, I should like your own opinion only, since we do not wish to let the United States Government know at this time that the possibility of an all-Canadian Waterway is being examined.

5. It would be most helpful if I could have your views on these points by August 3.

Projet d'une note pour le Comité du Cabinet sur la politique économique

Draft Memorandum for the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy

CONFIDENTIAL [n.d.]

FUTURE ACTION ON THE ST. LAWRENCE WATERWAY AND POWER PROJECT

1. Now that it has become clear that the United States Congress will not act on the St. Lawrence Agreement this year, the Interdepartmental Committee has come to the conclusion that the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy might wish to re-examine the St. Lawrence situation in the light of the views expressed by the Prime Minister on January 28, 1949, when he said in the House of Commons:

> "I think it is only fair for us to say that if we cannot at this time get implementation of this agreement for the double-barrelled purpose of navigation and power, the value of the power is so great that we shall have to give very serious consideration to going ahead and developing it on the power side alone."

The Prospects of Congressional Approval of the 1941 St. Lawrence Agreement

1. It is now known that the present Congress will not take any action to approve the St. Lawrence Agreement. It is impossible to determine whether the new Congress is likely to do so in 1951. One favourable factor is the increasing realization in some quarters in the United States of the importance of the Labrador iron ore development. This, however, has not been enough to bring the 1941 Agreement onto the floor of either House of Congress this year and there is no assurance that it will do so next year.

The Need of Power in Ontario

3. Ontario is counting on power from the Niagara and St. Lawrence Rivers to meet its future needs. If the Niagara Diversion Treaty[62] is ratified by the United States this year (which is in some doubt) the new plants to be constructed at Niagara can be in operation by 1953 or 1954. In the opinion of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission, however, the additional power thus made available will not justify any delay in the development of St. Lawrence power. It is only expected to provide for the anticipated growth in demand between 1954 and the earliest time that St. Lawrence power can be made available. The latter is expected to be needed by 1957. If, for any reason, the United States fails to ratify the Niagara Diversion Treaty in the meantime, the need of St. Lawrence power will be even more urgent. Power facilities in the International Rapids Section could probably be constructed in four years, but the cost would be appreciably greater than for a longer period of construction. At least five years should be allowed for construction of the Waterway.

Labrador Iron Ore and the Deep Waterway

4. The Labrador iron ore development is one important factor bearing on the question of the need for early construction of the Deep Waterway. There appears to be no doubt that Labrador ore could compete with Mesabi ore in the Pittsburgh area even without the Deep Waterway. This would assure annual sales at the rate of ten million tons, which is considered to be the necessary minimum for development of the ore to be profitable. A toll-free Deep Waterway, however, would permit deliveries to Pittsburg cheaper by 49¢ to 92¢ a long ton than the cheapest alternative route, a saving of $4.9 to $9.2 millions a year on the minimum output. Moreover, it would open an equally profitable market in virtually the whole Great Lakes area, enabling an immediate doubling of output and adding another $70 to $90 millions a year to the Canadian national income. Much of this would take the form of earnings of United States dollars. The imposition of tolls would, of course, lessen these advantages somewhat, but if the tolls were not unreasonably high, the Waterway would still be a critical factor for full Labrador development.

3. As long as there remains a good chance that the Deep Waterway may be undertaken in the near future, it would appear worthwhile for the Labrador interests to delay their development so that the beginning of large shipments may coincide with the opening of the new canals. If the ore is to be moved by rail, transfer facilities costing perhaps $20 millions must be constructed at Montreal or Baltimore. If the Deep Waterway were opened shortly after the completion of these transfer facilities most of their cost would be wasted since the Waterway would still attract this traffic at any reasonable rate of toll. In summary, the Deep Waterway is needed if the Labrador iron ore resources are to be fully developed; from this point of view, the earlier construction can begin the greater will be the advantages of the Waterway.

Defence Aspects

6. The Deep Waterway would have three main advantages for continental defence. It would ensure a dependable source of iron ore capable of rapid expansion and moving over a route that would be reasonably easy to protect. It would permit greatly increased traffic of war materials. It would also permit the construction of larger ocean-going ships in the sheltered Great Lakes area — merchant ships as well as naval vessels. If we are to be in a position to take full advantage of these possibilities in an emergency, construction of the Waterway should take place in peacetime.

Possible Courses of Action

7. Three possible courses appear to be open to the Canadian Government:

(a) To wait another year for possible approval of the 1941 Agreement by the United States Congress.

(b) To try to bring about development by Canada and the United States, or by Ontario and New York, of the power resources of the International Rapids Section without a Deep Waterway.

(c) To combine power development as in (b) with construction of an all-Canadian waterway.

Awaiting United States Approval of 1941 Agreement

8. In many respects this is the simplest course. The main difficulty is that approval by Congress in 1951 cannot be counted on, and in the meantime another valuable year may be lost. Another consideration is that Congressional approval, if it is obtained, will almost certainly be contingent upon the negotiation with Canada of an agreement for the imposition of tolls. These negotiations would have to include the determination of the total amount to be collected, the division of the revenue between the two countries, and the preparation of a detailed schedule of tolls.

Development of Power Alone

9. The most feasible method would be for the two federal governments to refer the existing application of the Ontario Hydro-Electric Power Commission and the Power Authority of the State of New York to the International Joint Commission. If the latter then issued an order of approval of the works proposed, construction could take place without any need for an agreement between the United States and Canadian Governments, and therefore without any reference to Congress. If the Canadian Government decided to follow this procedure, some persuasion might be needed to induce the United States Government to refer the application of the Power Authority of the State of New York to the International Joint Commission. In September, 1948, Mr. Truman stated at a press conference that he was opposed to separation of the navigation and power features of the project and that he would not approve the project except as a whole. He might be induced to alter this stand now that two more years have gone by without congressional approval of the combined project. In addition, the United States Federal Power Commission must grant a licence to the Power Authority of the State of New York. The Federal Power Commission is now considering the recommendations of an Examiner appointed in 1948 to determine whether such a licence for the United States share of the works should be granted. The Examiner in December, 1949, recommended against the granting of a licence on the following grounds, inter alia:

> "In order that the future operation of both navigation and power facilities in the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence River may be carried on with a minimum of friction between the two nations involved, it is desirable that facilities on the United States side of the International Boundary should be constructed and owned by the Government of the United States."

Nevertheless, the ultimate attitude of the Federal Power Commission will probably be determined by whatever stand is finally adopted by the Administration. Incidentally, the Canadian Department of Justice has ruled that the Ontario Hydro has no valid authority at present either to make such an application to the International Joint Commission or to undertake a development of the kind contemplated. New legislation would presumably be necessary if the Canadian Government decided to put forward the application of the Ontario Hydro.

10. There is another possible method of seeking separate power development. The United States and Canada could enter into an agreement or a treaty for the development of power alone. The Canadian rights and obligations under such an agreement could be transferred to Ontario following the procedure recently adopted for the Niagara development. An agreement of this type with the United States would be subject to the usual delays and uncertainties attending ratification of treaties and agreements in Congress. For this reason it is doubtful whether it merits serious consideration at this late date. In Congress such an agreement might meet with less opposition than the 1941 Agreement, but it would probably have less active supporters as well, since the power would benefit only New York State and one or two of its neighbours. The dispute between public and private power interests which has already endangered the Niagara Treaty might be a further source of delay.

Power Development Together With an All-Canadian Deep Waterway

11. If it were decided to proceed with the development of St. Lawrence power along the lines of paragraph 9, Canada could construct a Deep Waterway through the International Rapids Section on the Canadian side of the International Boundary. No agreement with the United States would be needed. This work could be done either concurrently with or subsequent to the construction of the power facilities, although a saving in cost of $12.5 millions would be effected if the works were constructed concurrently.

12. If the navigation works were built on the Canadian side in the International Rapids Section, the Deep Waterway constructed through the Canadian section of the river, and 27 ft. depth provided through the Welland ship canal, all that would be required to complete a deep waterway into Lake Erie would be some minor dredging on the United States side of the boundary in the Thousand Islands Section of the St. Lawrence River. If the United States would not do this, it could be done by Canada, no doubt, following the precedent established in the past when the United States deepened channels on the Canadian side of the boundary in the Detroit River. With this done, an all-Canadian waterway would be available into Lake Erie and it is believed that the United States would proceed with the deepening of the upper lake channels in order to extend the Deep Waterway to the head of the Great Lakes. The depths available in these channels at the present time are 25 ft. downbound and 21 ft. upbound. Deepening to the required 27 ft. depth would only be an extension of the existing United States programme in this section.

13. The total estimated first cost of the project with the navigation works on the Canadian side in the International Rapids Section is about $30,000,000 more than with such works on the United States side. A comparison of the resulting total annual cost to Canada under the two methods of procedure can only be estimated after various assumptions are made as to the division of the total capital costs between the Province of Ontario and Canada. Preliminary estimates in this regard, based on assumptions in line with past agreements as to the division of costs made in 1941, show that the resulting total annual cost for navigation would not be any greater than with the plans proposed in the 1941 Agreement. Moreover, even though Canada paid the whole of the first cost, a considerable share of the annual charges would be borne by the United States through the collection of tolls. Canada would be entitled to levy tolls in such a waterway provided they do not discriminate against the United States. The preparation of a schedule of tolls would be free from the difficulties of negotiation mentioned in paragraph 8 above. A table is attached,† outlining the costs of such a project in comparison with costs under other methods of procedure.

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État suppléant aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Deputy Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], August 9, 1950

In a telegram commenting on a draft memorandum on the St. Lawrence project which the Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence is preparing, Mr. Wrong has given us some interesting information about the United States Government's present attitude towards the 1941 St. Lawrence Agreement.

2. The following is the relevant extract from this telegram (WA-1654 of August 2†):

"1. In the course of our discussions with the State Department on the point raised in paragraph 4 of your letter, we learned in strict confidence that, about three weeks ago, the White House gave consideration from the point of view of defence at this time to the importance of the construction of additional power facilities and of a deep waterway on the St. Lawrence. As a result, the President directed Secretary of Commerce Sawyer to undertake a survey to ascertain what would be the Congressional reaction if new efforts were made at this session to secure Congressional approval of the 1941 Agreement. This survey is now being conducted under the supervision of Assistant Secretary of Commerce [Thomas W.S.] Davis. The State Department hope to have some information to convey to us some time next week concerning the progress of this survey.

2. According to information secured by the State Department from the Department of Commerce, the present plans of the Administration call for the 1941 Agreement being pressed in Congress, if there appears to have taken place an appreciable shift of opinion, which makes it possible that approval might be obtained. The project would be "dressed in uniform" and presented as a strictly military measure. If it is decided to proceed with this plan, Chairman Symington of the National Resources Board will request Secretary of Commerce Sawyer to make renewed efforts to secure approval of the Agreement on account of its importance as a defence project.

3. I understand that the prevailing sentiment in the Department of Commerce is that the defence argument, on which reactivation of the project in Congress would be based, would lose much of its strength, if too much time elapsed before renewing efforts to secure approval, since it would appear that the value of the dual project from the point of view of defence only occurred to the Administration on second thought. For this reason, some of the officers of the Department of Commerce who are concerned with the matter favour swift action, under the pressure of emergency, should the current survey reveal that the increase in support is substantial enough to warrant re-opening the issue.

4. Referring to the point raised in paragraph 4 of your letter, our informant in the State Department stated that, in this time of "creeping crisis", he thought that the defence value of the project would not be weakened in the eyes of Congress by the amount of manpower and material resources to be applied to its construction, as those resources would not yet have been devoted to more urgent tasks of national defence. The situation, however, would be different if the United States were to enter a major war.

5. He emphasized very strongly that the information given us was confidential and had not even been passed on to their Embassy in Ottawa. He stressed that the present plans would have to be given up if any information on their nature leaked out, especially to the opponents of the project. For this reason, I should be grateful if you would treat this information with the utmost care.

6. My judgment of the new developments described above is that they should be viewed with caution and not too much optimism. If an unsuccessful attempt is made to secure Congressional approval at this session, it might facilitate passage of the legislation by the next Congress."

TELEGRAM WA-1847 Washington, August 18, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

My WA-1654 of August 2nd.† St. Lawrence waterway and power project.

The Canadian Desk today advised me that the Department of Commerce have been unable to arouse any great interest in the St. Lawrence project at the present time. They state that members of Congress are so engrossed with other matters that the prospects for any action at this session of Congress appear to be nil.

The Administration, however, intends to pursue its idea of having the project "dressed in uniform" and will present it in this manner to the next session of Congress.

Le sous-secrétaire d'État adjoint aux Affaires extérieures au ministre de l'ambassade aux États-Unis

Assistant Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister, Embassy in United States

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, October 28, 1950

Dear Don [Matthews],

The Interdepartmental Committee on the St. Lawrence is still working on the proposed memorandum for the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy concerning future action on the St. Lawrence project. You will remember that we sent a preliminary draft to the Embassy for comments in July (our letter X-2118 of July 25).

2. I now enclose the latest draft, dated October 26.† This is still preliminary and has not yet been seen even by the Under-Secretary. Some of the ideas in this draft (particularly in paragraphs 15-16) resulted from discussions with General McNaughton, whose opinions on this subject have been partly formulated in informal and unofficial talks he has had with the United States members of the International Joint Commission and with other United States engineers and officials.

3. The General firmly believes that there will be very little chance of President Truman consenting to the New York-Ontario separate power plan, on the grounds that he has come out too strongly and too often in public against anything less than the combined development for power and navigation, and that he strongly favours Federal development of St. Lawrence power instead of State development.

4. My own feeling is that he underestimates Mr. Truman's willingness to change his mind when the occasion dictates and that he does not realize how much pressure Canada could put on the President, which would, no doubt, be reinforced by similar pressure from New York State (especially if Governor Dewey[63] is re-elected). I should be glad to know what you think about this point. I should also like to know whether you have any information about the President's views on Federal versus State development of St. Lawrence power. I understood that New York would operate the power plant even if the 1941 Agreement were approved, under an existing agreement between the Federal and State Governments. If that is correct, it would hardly be consistent for the President to oppose the New York-Ontario plan on that ground.

5. General McNaughton recognizes that the New York-Ontario plan would be preferable to the third plan described in this memorandum (paragraph 15). He thinks, however, that the latter will have to be adopted and he maintains that his United States colleagues on the Commission share his views. He believes the main stumbling block in Congress is the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and that it could be by-passed under this plan. Congress would have to provide funds but that would be dealt with by other committees and then by each House as a whole. While I have always understood that the Foreign Relations Committee under Connally's chairmanship was a real obstacle, I am by no means convinced that the necessary appropriation of funds would be easy to get through Congress. What are your views on this point and on the feasibility of the third alternative as a whole?

6. The section on the time factor in this memorandum is highly tentative but will give you some idea of what we are facing. You might wish to comment on paragraph 22(a), and 25(a) and (c).

7. There is one other point on which we would greatly appreciate having your views. In the first sentence under "Conclusions" we suggest that we should be able to determine by about March 1st whether Congress is likely to approve the 1941 Agreement in 1951. Do you think we would be able to judge this earlier than March 1st? Or is March 1st itself likely to be too early to tell?

8. Finally, you may wish to comment on the last paragraph, on the question of publicity.

9. I recognize that these requests add up to a pretty tall order, but we are anxious to avoid going astray on any of these points when so much is at stake.

Yours sincerely,
H.O. MORAN

ST. LAWRENCE AGREEMENT

Since receipt of your letter officers of the Embassy have discussed the St. Lawrence Agreement with officers of the State Department, the Federal Power Commission and the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association.

2. Your letter under reference raises six main questions, which are set out below, together with the comments of the Embassy.

(i). What are the chances that the President would agree to State development of power rather than Federal development of power in the international section of the St. Lawrence River?

Until last winter it had always been assumed that power plants erected on the United States side of the international section of the St. Lawrence River would be operated by the State of New York. The proposal at that time was to have construction for which the United States was responsible built by the Federal authorities. Upon completion the plant would be turned over to the New York power authority to operate and New York would repay the cost of construction on an amortization basis. Section 5 of H.R. 271 and S.R. 99, which was submitted to the 81st Congress, provided for this method of construction and financing. You were advised in despatch #440 of February 18, 1950,† that the Administration was considering a proposal that this clause should be deleted from the resolution since the Administration wished to open the question of the possibility of the Federal authorities operating the plants. Recently we have been advised by Mr. de Luccia, Chief of the Bureau of Power of the Federal Power Commission, that the Administration has decided not to re-open this question and that it is now ready to accept State operation of any power plants.

In the F.P.C. consideration is now being given to the possibility of New York State not only operating the plants but paying for the original cost of construction. It is expected that all large appropriations will, in the 82nd Congress, be strenuously opposed by certain Senators and Congressmen on grounds of economy irrespective of the merits of the project to be financed. If the original financing of power development on the St. Lawrence were to be the responsibility of the State of New York no Federal appropriations would be required and this cause of opposition would be removed. It is understood that this proposal has not yet been taken up with the White House.

(ii). The chance of the President approving a separate power development.

The President has in the past come out strongly against a separate power development and it would be difficult for him to retreat from this position. We are advised, however, that the recent public opposition of the President to a separate power development originated at a press conference in reply to an unexpected question and without briefing by the officials of the Departments concerned. Therefore, his statement did not represent the thinking of his advisers and it is quite possible that they might recommend strongly a separate development if this were suggested by Canada. It is almost certain that the F.P.C. would back such a proposal.

The President, however, has on more than one occasion during the last year or two expressed in discussion with Canadian Ministers his strong support for the entire project, and has stated that he has been convinced of its soundness in the national interest since, as a junior Senator, he went into it thoroughly in the middle thirties.

If sufficient pressure for a separate power development by New York and Ontario can be exerted by Canada and by Congress it is possible that the President would be ready to change his position, particularly if Canada expressed an intention to go ahead with the seaway development alone.

While a proposal for separate power development would not receive the active support of the interests in the mid-west states which are primarily interested in the seaway, most of the active opponents of the whole project would also drop their opposition as they are primarily interested in the transportation aspects. New York State would probably obtain the support of other States since there appears to be little opposition to public development of power facilities by States, as opposed to private development.

(iii). The possibility of proceeding by means of a submission to the International Joint Commission without Congressional action.

This suggestion appears to be politically impossible. Congress is very jealous of its rights and all members of Congress, even those who are supporters of the St. Lawrence Agreement, would probably react violently to any attempt by the Administration to bypass Congress, particularly on a matter that had been before Congress for nearly twenty years. Even if the Administration were ready to proceed with a recommendation to the I.J.C., which is most doubtful, the matter would be bound to come before Congress as any plan to construct a seaway would require Federal appropriations. It is probable that such appropriations, under these circumstances, would not be passed; in any event a request for appropriations would result in a bitter fight in Congress and the Administration is bound to be faced with sufficient fights during the 82nd Congress without taking any action such as this.

Quite apart from difficulties that would be experienced in securing the passage of an appropriation bill it is doubtful whether all matters pertaining to the construction of a seaway could be dealt with by the I.J.C. without an agreement or treaty covering matters such as navigation rights, tolls, etc.

(iv). Timetable.

It is always extremely difficult to estimate the time needed by the U.S. Administration to secure action in Congress on any important matter. The time suggested for the various steps in paragraph 22(a) of the fifth draft of a memorandum for the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy, dated October 26th, appear to be as good an estimate as is now possible. As mentioned in section 3 above, there appears to be no possibility of proceeding by submission to the I.J.C. and, therefore, the timetable suggested for this procedure in paragraph 25 of the memorandum does not arise.

(v). The prospects for Congressional approval of the 1941 Agreement in the first session of the 82nd Congress.

There appears to be little doubt that the President will press for early approval of the 1941 Agreement. We would be ready to estimate by March, 1951, the prospects of Congressional approval. By that time we will know the composition of the relevant Congressional committees and sub-committees and will be able to forecast the stand which will be taken by leaders of both parties in both houses. It is doubtful, however, if by that time it will be possible to make an estimate of the time when the Agreement will reach the floor of the two houses for a vote. Undoubtedly the first session of the new Congress will have to deal with many important matters and the probability of a conflict between the Administration and Congress may be most time-consuming. Therefore, even though at that time it may appear that Congress would act favourably on the 1941 Agreement, it will undoubtedly be impossible to forecast the time when such Agreement could come into force so that any elements of doubt would be removed.

(vi). Canadian publicity in favour of the Agreement.

A carefully coordinated plan to bring to the attention of the U.S. public and to members of Congress the Canadian attitude on the 1941 Agreement will be essential early next winter. Mr. de Luccia of the Federal Power Commission made the suggestion that at that time a few speeches by Canadian Cabinet Ministers before a carefully selected audience would be helpful. He pointed out that at the executive hearings on the Niagara Treaty the members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee were greatly interested in the Canadian needs for development of additional power and in the attitude of the Canadian Government towards the Treaty. While consideration by Congress will undoubtedly be based primarily upon consideration of the effect of the project on the United States economy, the needs of Canada and the effect of inaction on Canadian-U.S. relations will exert an important influence on members of Congress.

I think it is advisable that Canadian statements on this matter be withheld until the new Congress meets. Statements at this time, either in Canada or in the United States, will get publicity in the U.S. press. However, if the same statements are repeated two months from now, at which time publicity would be of most use, the press might well consider that they were no longer of news value and their treatment might be cursory.

3. It is too early to form any firm opinion of the effect of the recent elections on the prospects of the 1941 Agreement. According to Dr. [N.R.] Danielian of the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence Association five known supporters of the Agreement have been defeated in the Senate, but this loss is offset by the defeat of certain opponents, notably Senator Tydings. The Association expects Senator Taft to come out strongly in support of the Agreement and to carry with him the Republican Senators from the mid-west and possibly on account of his growing influence a large number of Republicans from other areas. Supporters of the project are cautious when commenting on the effect of the election, but appear to be somewhat more optimistic.

4. The White House appears to have given no recent thought to the matter and those in the State Department at a junior level who should be concerned with the problem say that since the Agreement has become so deeply involved in politics the State Department will do nothing and will not decide upon any policy line until direction is received from the White House. We are taking steps to draw attention to the need for some early action by the President designed to stimulate the activities of the interested departments and agencies before the new Congress meets.

5. In paragraph 22(a) of the draft memorandum to the Cabinet Committee on Economic Policy you refer to the time required to arrange for the inclusion of a control dam in the plans for power development. In the course of our discussions with U.S. officials it has become apparent that the U.S. engineers connected with the project consider that a control dam is unnecessary and will be ready to oppose its inclusion in the plans strenuously on the basis of economy.

6. My impression of the public attitude towards approval of the complete St. Lawrence project is that active opposition has substantially declined, although the hostility of the railroads and port authorities on the eastern seaboard has not abated. The decline of active opposition, however, has not as yet resulted in a marked increase in positive public support. Many who now are inclined to favour the early construction of the entire project have had their judgment affected by regional rather than national considerations, such as the shortage of low-cost power in the northeast at a time when the economy is rapidly expanding and the need for a new and economical source of iron ore by some of the big steel manufacturers. Unfortunately, the basic national arguments in favour of an early start at construction cannot be readily dramatized so as to stimulate popular support in the southern, southwestern and far western regions of the country. Hence it is impossible as yet to give a confident answer to the question whether the more favourable atmosphere which has developed is powerful enough to influence a sufficient number of votes in the Congress.

7. Three new members will have to be appointed to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee at the opening of the first session of the 82nd Congress. Of the continuing members on the Democratic side, three (Senators Connally, George[64] and Fulbright[65]) are from the uninterested south, and two (Senators McMahon and Green[66] from New England, which has been the seat of much active opposition. On the Republican side, it is likely that Senators Vandenberg,[67] Wiley[68] and Hickenlooper[69] will favour prompt consideration, whereas Senator Lodge is a leader of the opposition to the project and Senator Smith[70] of New Jersey will probably also be opposed. Even if the two Democrats and one Republican who will be appointed to the Committee were all to be strong supporters of the project, which is most unlikely, the majority in it would continue to be either hostile or indifferent.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

1. I saw Mr. Webb, the Under-Secretary of State who was accompanied by Mr. Benninghoff, on December 11th in order to put to him the proposal for an early informal meeting of experts to exchange information on the latest estimates of the cost of the project. Mr. Webb thought well of the idea and instructed Mr. Benninghoff to take it up at once with the agencies concerned. At his suggestion a memorandum was later left at the State Department to assist him in discussing the matter. The memorandum proposed "that an informal meeting be held by the engineering experts of the two countries in order to exchange information or the latest estimates of cost". It suggested that such a meeting should be held before the middle of January and that detailed arrangements should be made with Mr. G.A. Lindsay of the Department of Transport.[71] I should be glad to be promptly informed of any approach on this subject which may be made to Mr. Lindsay.

2. I went on to inquire about the arrangements contemplated for presenting the 1941 Agreement to the Congress at the next session. Mr. Webb said that he was not personally informed of the latest developments, but undertook to take the matter up himself at the White House and to pass on the information which I gave him about the urgency of rapid progress from the Canadian point of view.

3. In this connection I mentioned the sharp increase in the requirements for power of the Province of Ontario, which now indicated that there would be a shortage in the winter of 1956 to '57 unless some power from the St. Lawrence became available or additional thermal power plants were constructed. I pointed out that plans would have to be made soon to meet this estimated deficiency and that therefore it was important to be able to arrive at an estimate of the prospects of congressional approval by about the end of March. I made it clear that the Canadian Government strongly desired the approval of the 1941 Agreement at the next session of the Congress, so that actual construction might begin early in 1952 and the preliminary organizational arrangements might be made in the months preceding the beginning of construction.

4. I told Mr. Webb that if it became evident that the Congress was unlikely to approve the 1941 Agreement at the next session the Canadian Government would probably be moved to press for a separate power development by the Province of Ontario and the State of New York, although this would be done regretfully because of the high importance which was attached to the dual project. I mentioned that when iron ore from the Labrador-Quebec deposits began to move to Montreal in perhaps three years it would be necessary to construct transit rail facilities there if the building of the seaway was not well advanced by that time. I alluded briefly in the context to the suggestions that an all-Canadian seaway might be built.

[71] Guy A. Lindsay, ingénieur en chef, Direction générale du génie, ministère du Transport.
Guy A. Lindsay, Engineer-in-Charge, General Engineering Branch, Department of Transport.

5. Finally, I said to Mr. Webb that I would welcome suggestions for any assistance which Canada might be able to offer in stimulating public interest in, and support for, the early approval of the whole project. He undertook to keep this in mind and to discuss it at the White House. I remarked, especially with reference to Senator Taft's recent public statements mentioned in paragraph 4 of my WA-3078 of November 30th,† that it might indeed become difficult in the event of early and complete economic mobilization for defence purposes to spare the manpower and materials for the accelerated construction of the project. The importance of the entire project to defence of the continent was, however, becoming more and more evident, and the sensible course seemed to be for approval for its construction to be granted as soon as possible. It could then be determined in the light of existing circumstances and supplies of manpower and materials how rapidly construction should be undertaken. He wholly agreed with this point of view.

6. I expect to have a further discussion with Mr. Webb within a few days when he has had an opportunity of consulting the President and others concerned.

ST. LAWRENCE PROJECT

1. Reference my despatch No. 3222 of December 13th. Benninghoff of the State Department, who was present at my interview with Webb, reported in my despatch under reference, reported to us the discussion which took place between Stanley Woodward and Charles Murphy[72] at the White House on Saturday on the St. Lawrence project. (Charles Murphy is one of the most influential of the President's assistants). It had been Woodward's intention to see the President himself on this question but Mr. Truman, after his exertions last week, had gone to his yacht for a rest. Murphy had received a report from the State Department on my interview with Webb of December 11th. He thought that the President would welcome the idea of an informal meeting to be held by the engineering experts of the two countries in order to exchange information on the latest estimates of cost. Murphy said that if such a meeting was to be held it might be desirable to arrange it before January 15th so that as much progress as possible could be made in the early part of the next session of Congress on this question. He undertook to speak to the President about this.

2. Murphy went on to say that in his opinion the best chance of getting favourable action at the next session of Congress on the project was to have a positive endorsement of the project from Charles Wilson, the new Director of Defence Mobilization. Murphy remarked that Mr. Wilson's endorsement would be valuable not only from the standpoint of persuading Congressional critics of the project that the expenditure of manpower and resources would be justified for defence purposes, but also it might serve to quiet some New England critics of the project, having in mind Mr. Wilson's great prestige in New York in particular and New England generally.

3. Murphy thought it would also be desirable to have the support and endorsement of the Secretary of Defence in order to satisfy Congress that the project was desirable from a defence standpoint. Murphy went on to say that it was incumbent on the United States Government to study the project in the context of the new defence and mobilization planning and to establish on an objective basis whether the projects could be justified in terms of the expenditures required in men and material in the new circumstances created by the national emergency. From this standpoint Murphy said he could not at the present time be sure what answer would be given.

4. Stanley Woodward and Benninghoff at this point drew Murphy's attention to the particular importance which was now attached to progress in the project by the Canadian Government. Murphy said that this was fully appreciated in the White House. He said he would take immediate steps to bring the United States officials concerned together to consider the strategy which the Administration should adopt in the next session of Congress. In the event that this review by the United States Officials resulted in the decision that the expenditures in men and materials in the present circumstances were not justified, consideration would have to be given to the question of going ahead with a separate power development by the Province of Ontario and the State of New York. Murphy said the President would be inclined to oppose such a course. The question would also arise whether Congressional consent would be required for separate power development by the Province of Ontario and the State of New York. Benninghoff thought that a case could be made for excluding the necessity for Congressional consent on the grounds that it is covered by the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909.[73]

5. At the conclusion of the talk Murphy said that he would do everything possible to expedite the re-consideration of the St. Lawrence project by the United States officials concerned in terms of the present new mobilization effort in the United States and to consider tactics which the Administration should adopt in handling the question in relation to Congress. Benninghoff added that the White House was also aware of Mr. Howe's representations to Mr. Sawyer on the St. Lawrence project and that, having regard to Mr. Chevrier's recent statements,[74] he thought everything possible had been done for the moment both formally and informally, by the Canadian Government to bring our views to the attention of the United States Government.

Memorandum from Minister of Resources and Development and Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 36-50 [Ottawa], January 30, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

DIVERSION OF YUKON RIVER WATERS, YUKON TERRITORY, TO PROPOSED POWER PLANTS IN TAIYA RIVER VALLEY, ALASKA

The undersigned wish to report on the above project which will utilize Canadian waters to develop a large block of power for a proposed aluminum plant in the Taiya River Valley, south-east Alaska.

The project involves the building of a dam on the Yukon River at Miles Canyon 3 miles south of Whitehorse, Yukon Territory, and the raising of the water levels of all tributary waters of the Yukon River south of the damsite, to an approximate elevation of 2,205 feet, Geodetic datum. Some 5,000 cubic feet per second of water will then be diverted south-westerly across the International Boundary, and through the Mount St. Elias Range to the Taiya River Valley, Alaska, by means of two large hydraulic tunnels. The upper or No. 1 tunnel will be 10.2 miles long and the lower or No. 2 tunnel 11.2 miles long. (See attached map†) At the lower end of each tunnel a power plant will be constructed and which will utilize a total head of some 2,200 feet to develop approximately 1,100,000 horse-power. The second or lower tunnel will supply water to No. 2 plant at approximately sea level. The power developed will be used to manufacture aluminum from bauxite ore brought in by boat, will also supply a new town of some 2,000 aluminum workers and their families, and will be transmitted to consumers at other points where the amount of power required and the limited distance involved, makes this economically feasible.

In addition to the main power plants described above, the project includes a plant of not less than 10,000 horse-power at the Whitehorse dam to meet all requirements of the Whitehorse district that are within economic transmitting distance. Sufficient water will be released at the Whitehorse dam to meet navigation needs on the Yukon River during the season, and to develop the power that may be required in that area. The amount of water to be diverted is about one-half of the mean flow of the Yukon River at Whitehorse, and which is estimated at 10,000 cubic feet per second. The average flow of the Yukon River below the Whitehorse dam will thus be reduced by 5,000 cubic feet per second through both the Yukon Territory and Alaska. Constant uniform flow through the diversion works will be maintained by the great storage reservoir created by the Whitehorse dam.

The project first came to the notice of the Department of Resources and Development (then Mines and Resources) in October 1947, when high officials of the Aluminum Company of America (Alcoa) visited Ottawa and outlined its possibilities in informal conversations with some members of the Cabinet, and senior officials of the Department of Mines and Resources. Since that time further discussions have taken place, with Ministerial approval, on an informal and strictly confidential basis. As a result of these exchanges of views unalienated land in the Yukon Territory that might be affected has been temporarily reserved from entry and the Aluminum Company has been granted a permit under the Dominion Water Power regulations to make field surveys and investigations.

From the Canadian standpoint the interests of the Yukon Territory, and the benefits that might accrue to it from the development, are of paramount importance. These have been under frequent consideration and have been a subject of discussion from time to time with Alcoa officials. These officials have also been in touch with the province of British Columbia since the upper reaches of the Yukon River drainage basin lie in that province, and its water resources are substantially involved. British Columbia has indicated that it will take no official action on the project, nor does it wish any publicity until it has successfully completed arrangements with the Aluminum Company of Canada (Alcan) for a power development on the Nechako River, B.C. to supply an aluminum plant to be built in that province.

Within the past year the Department of the Interior of the United States has taken an active interest in the project, because of the Alaska territory and resources involved, and has suggested the desirability of the project being undertaken as a United States Government venture.

This proposal was discussed at an informal meeting of officials of the Canadian and the United States Governments held in Ottawa on the 21st and 22nd of November 1949.[75] The United States delegates present explained their interest in the project and expressed doubt as to whether the Aluminum Company of America would be granted the United States licences that would be required and that under these circumstances the project would preferably be undertaken by the Bureau of Reclamation of the United States Department of the Interior. The delegation strongly suggested that, as a preliminary step, the matter should be referred to the International Joint Commission. The latter would likely follow its usual practise of appointing a Joint Engineering Board composed of an equal number of engineers from the interested agencies of the two governments. This Board, after making complete field investigations including topographical surveys and borings at damsites, would submit a recommendation to the International Joint Commission which would in turn place it before the two governments concerned.

It was the view of the Canadian representatives present at the meeting that a reference to the International Joint Commission at this time was not advisable for several reasons. The most important of these was that the province of British Columbia was greatly interested and had definitely stated it could give no formal approval at this time to the project because of its negotiations with the Aluminum Company of Canada for an aluminum plant in the province, nor for the same reason did it wish any publicity to be given to the Yukon River project. It would obviously be impossible for the International Joint Commission to embark on a project of such magnitude involving public hearings and a great deal of survey work, without a large amount of publicity resulting therefrom and which would prove most embarrassing to the British Columbia Government. At the same time, a reference to the Commission would result in the United States technical personnel undertaking survey work in Canada as members of the Joint Engineering Board.

On the other hand the Aluminum Company of America is quite prepared to undertake all surveys necessary to finally determine the feasibility of the project and on which final designs and construction plans could be based. Officials of the Company stated that they were prepared to spend as much as $1,000,000 on such surveys, providing they had reasonable assurances that Canada and the United States would approve the development in so far as their respective interests were concerned.

The attitude of the United States authorities to the Aluminum Company of America, as described by the United States representatives at the November meeting, made it most unlikely that the Company could proceed with its surveys and consequently these would have to be undertaken on some other basis. The representatives at the meeting finally decided that the surveys required at this time should be made by each country in its own territory subject to certain adjustments of parties that might be necessary in view of the rugged terrain of some of the areas where surveys would be made. The undertaking of such surveys would be subject to the approval of the governments of Canada and the United States.

The latter country has indicated its agreement to this action in note No.18 of January 24th† from the American Embassy to the Secretary of State for External

[75] Voir DREC, volume 15, document 997./See DCER, Volume 15, Document 997.

Affairs. In this note the United States government also advises that they have appointed Mr. W.E. Warne, Assistant Secretary of the Interior and Brigadier-General J.S. Bradgen, Deputy Chief of Engineers, United States Army, as its representatives to co-ordinate and plan to work with Canadian representatives that may be appointed.

The stated objective is to make the required surveys without publicity, all operations and correspondence being of a strictly confidential nature.

It now rests with the government of Canada to decide whether it will accept the recommendations of the International meeting of November last and provide funds in the 1950-51 estimates for Canada's share of the survey costs, it being agreed that each country will share these equally.

It is impossible to estimate with any degree of accuracy what these survey costs will be until Canadian representatives have met with the United States representatives already appointed and discussed the extent of the surveys to be made and how much detail in the work is required. It is the present view that surveys on which final designs could be based should not be made at this time but that they should be adequate to finally determine feasibility of the project and the scope of the engineering and construction work necessary to complete the development. As a rough approximation, the sum of $300,000 to be spent over two seasons might be indicative of Canada's financial responsibility if the surveys can be limited to the lines mentioned above.

It is proposed that if the surveys are to be undertaken the current study of the economic benefits to be derived by Canada from such a project would be continued with a view to placing all the information relating to the project before the Governments at the conclusion of the engineering studies.

It is suggested that some limitations to the survey work should be considered at this time because the proposal of the United States authorities to undertake the project as a United States government venture pre-supposes the following:

(a) that the United States Congress would approve and vote the funds that would be required for the development roughly estimated at $200,000,000.

(b) that the Aluminum Company of America would be willing to buy power from the United States authorities at the price they would demand.

(c) that the Canadian authorities would agree to divert the water.

Notwithstanding these factors, it is believed that it would be desirable for Canada to proceed with the survey work without any commitments at this time in regard to the diversion of water or construction, and subject to there being no serious objections from the province of British Columbia to having surveys undertaken by Canadian parties in that province.

The undersigned recommend accordingly and also that authority be given to include the sum of $150,000 in the 1950-51 estimates together with approval for the appointment by Governor-in-Council of Canadian representatives to work with the American representatives already appointed.[76]

PROPOSED YUKON WATER DIVERSION

The essential facts in connection with this proposal are as follows:

(1) The original suggestion was made by officers of the Aluminum Company of America in October, 1947. Mr. Howe and Mr. MacKinnon were the Ministers concerned at that time. (Mr. Glen was ill.)

(2) In all subsequent discussions the Canadian representatives have stressed first that maximum benefits must be provided to Canada, and second that no agreement will, or can be, reached except with the prior approval of the Government of British Columbia.

(3) The British Columbia Government will not approve the Yukon diversion proposal until the Aluminum Company of Canada has entered into a firm agreement for the development of a large aluminum project in British Columbia itself.

(4) The British Columbia Government and then (February, 1949) the Federal Government have reserved from entry all lands that might be affected by raising the water levels in the Yukon and British Columbia lakes. Both Governments have also given the Aluminum Company of America permission to carry on exploratory surveys.

(5) In July, 1949, the United States Government made an official approach to the Canadian Government, asking that the proposal be referred to the International Joint Commission. This proposal was discussed in some detail by the Canadian Departments concerned, and it was unanimously agreed that it should not be accepted. The Department of External Affairs finally proposed to the United States Government that informal discussion at the official level should be arranged.

(6) When the discussion referred to above took place (in November, 1949), the United States representatives again urged very strongly that the matter be referred to the International Joint Commission. Canadian officials refused to agree to this proposal and suggested as a substitute that arrangements be made, at a Departmental level in Washington and Ottawa, for an exploratory field and economic survey. The United States officials reported this proposal to their Government, and it was finally accepted. They appointed the Assistant Secretary of the Interior and the Deputy Chief of Engineers, United States Army, as American representatives to cooperate with departmental officials to be appointed by Ottawa in arranging for the proposed surveys. This decision was communicated to the Canadian Government on the 24th of January, 1950, and there have been repeated requests from the United States Embassy ever since asking for the appointment of Canadian officials to deal with the Americans mentioned above.

[76] Le cabinet a reporté sa décision le 1er février 1950 en attendant une étude ultérieure sur les avantages que procurerait ce projet au Canada.
Decision deferred by Cabinet on February 1, 1950 pending further study of the benefits which might accrue to Canada from this project.

(7) All of the Canadian officials concerned in the consideration of this matter are satisfied that very considerable benefits would result to Canada from the proposed development. It would involve an expenditure of some $40,000,000 or $50,000,000 in the Yukon and northern British Columbia. It would provide electric power at a very low rate for any conceivable development of mining or other industry in the Yukon. It would improve navigation conditions on the Yukon River and it would result in financial payments of the order of $400,000 a year to be divided between the Canadian and British Columbia Governments.

(8) It has been suggested that the construction of a big aluminum plant on the American side of the Yukon-Alaska border would mean increased competition for the Aluminum Company of Canada. This is denied by the officials of the Aluminum Company of America who say that the Alaska plant would produce solely for domestic consumption within the United States and that, in fact, a very large part of its output would be used for United States military purposes. It is also understood that the proposed Aluminum Company of Canada plant in British Columbia would be engaged in manufacture solely for export. It is also argued that the demand for aluminum is increasing so rapidly that the supply will have difficulty in maintaining an equal pace. In any case, the Aluminum Company of Canada knows about the Alaska project and if they object to it, they can insist as a term of their agreement with the Province of British Columbia that the Province shall refuse to agree to the Alaska development. If British Columbia refuses to participate, the whole project will have to be abandoned.

Dear Hugh [Keenleyside],

Thanks for sending me a copy of your note to your Minister about the Yukon Power Development Project. My only comment is on paragraph 8 — the relationship between the Alcoa project and the Aluminum Company of Canada project.

I am afraid that, if Alcoa decides to go ahead with the Alaska development, then the British Columbia project may be abandoned. The location of additional aluminum capacity, assuming comparable production costs, may well depend on the United States tariff. If low cost aluminum is made available from Alaska, within the United States customs tariff, our chances of getting the United States tariff on aluminum removed would vanish. On the other hand, if the Aluminum Company of Canada go ahead with their British Columbia project, thus enormously increasing its capacity to produce low cost aluminum, the chances are, it seems to me, that Alcoa would not think it profitable to proceed with its Alaska plans.

It may be, as you say, that the situation remains in the control of the British Columbia Government, which can make its consent to the diversion and storage at Atlin Lake contingent on its concluding a satisfactory agreement with the Aluminum Company of Canada. My feeling, however, is that there is a national interest over and above the Provincial interest in promoting the British Columbia development ahead of the Alaska-Yukon project.

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, April 4, 1950

Dear Norman [Robertson],

I have just received your letter about the proposed Yukon water diversion. Apparently my memorandum to the Minister and the preceding documents† on this subject were not as clear as I thought they were.

So far as I know, everyone in Canada who knows anything about this project, including not only the Ministers of the Crown and the members of the British Columbia Government but all the officials of this Department including myself, agree that the British Columbia aluminum project should have priority over the proposed Alaska development. We are all at one in supporting the British Columbia determination to get the Aluminum Company of Canada tied up in an unbreakable agreement before giving any consideration to the diversion of British Columbia and Yukon waters into Alaska.

The point that I tried to make in my memorandum was that the situation is wholly in the hands of the British Columbia Government who possess an absolute veto over the Alaska project through their ownership of the larger part of the essential water. We are all behind Johnson[77] and his colleagues in their determination to use their favourable position to bring about this big development in Canada.

The best advice that we can get here is that both projects will be required by the vast expansion of the demand for aluminum. In order that there may be no unnecessary delay after British Columbia has got its plant, we feel that we should go ahead now with preliminary studies of the second project. The benefits that will accrue to Canada from the Alaska development, while not in the same class with those flowing from the British Columbia project, are, nevertheless, of a very considerable magnitude. The expenditure of fifty million dollars in the Yukon and the provision of an almost unlimited supply of low-cost power there may have a tremendous effect on the future of that part of Canada.

But let me reiterate that we are all, without exception, agreed that the British Columbia project must come first.

Yours sincerely,

HUGH [KEENLEYSIDE]

RESOURCES AND DEVELOPMENT; YUKON POWER PROJECT; PROPOSED SURVEY

17. The Minister of Resources and Development, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 1st, said that after further examination, it was recommended that the United States be informed that the Canadian Government was prepared to authorize its officials to participate in preliminary field and economic surveys for the proposed diversion of Yukon River waters for a hydro-electric power development in Alaska. At the same time it should be made clear to the U.S. authorities that the agreement was on the understanding that it involved no commitment for future action.

[77] Byron Ingemar Johnson, premier ministre de Colombie-Britannique.

An explanatory memorandum had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, April 1, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 105-50)†

18. The Acting Prime Minister said that it seemed difficult to withhold agreement to participation in the surveys. However, it had to be recognized that the development of aluminum production in Alaska, for which the power project was designed, might have unfortunate results for Canada. Additional supplies of low cost aluminum produced within the U.S. customs tariff would lessen what chance there was of getting the U.S. tariff on aluminum removed. If the Alaska plant were constructed, the Aluminum Company of Canada might not go ahead with its plans for new development in British Columbia. It had, however, been suggested that the B.C. Government would not agree to the water diversion unless it had assurance that the Aluminum Company of Canada would construct its B.C. plant.

19. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, approved the recommendation of the Minister of Resources and Development and agreed that the Department of External Affairs inform the United States Embassy that the Canadian Government was prepared to authorize its officials to participate in the proposed preliminary field and economic surveys for a diversion of Yukon River waters on the distinct understanding that such agreement involved no commitment as to future action.

NIAGARA DIVERSION TREATY

On November 17, 1949, the Cabinet agreed that officials of the Departments of External Affairs, Mines and Resources and Transport, together with experts from Ontario, should engage in discussions with United States officials to try to reach agreement on a draft Niagara Diversion Treaty for submission to the Governments concerned. The Treaty would supplement the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 and amend Article V of that Treaty with respect to the diversion of water from Niagara Falls, and the division of diverted water between the two Governments. At appendix A attached† is a statement of provisions that the Cabinet agreed the Canadian group should seek to have embodied in the draft treaty. The Premier of Ontario concurred in this statement.

2. At Appendix B attached† is the draft Niagara Diversion Treaty which has been agreed upon, and which is concurred in by the Departments of Transport and Resources and Development. This draft treaty embodies the substance of most of the desiderata set out in Appendix A. However, the Canadian group were unable to obtain United States agreement to the provision regarding the diversion at DeCew Falls (Appendix A, paragraph 2). This proved to be entirely unacceptable to the United States authorities. Since the amount of water involved is small, the Canadian group, with the full consent of the Ontario Hydro representatives, finally yielded this point.

3. Since 1909 Canada has had authority to divert 16,000 cubic feet per second more water than the United States. Both countries, however, have had the use of power produced by approximately equal amounts of water because of the export from Canada to the United States of the power produced by about 3600 cubic feet of water per second. The attached draft Niagara Diversion Treaty provides for an equal division of water between the two countries, with the exception provided in Article VIII that "until such time as there are facilities in the territory of one party to use its full share of the diversions of water for power purposes agreed upon in this Treaty, the other party may use the portion of that share for the use of which facilities are not available". No provision is made in the draft treaty for termination of the existing export contracts. The meaning of Article VIII is essentially the same as the formula the Canadian group were instructed to seek (Appendix A, paragraph 6) and to which the Ontario Hydro representatives and the Premier of Ontario had agreed.

4. During the discussions in Washington, however, the Ontario Hydro representatives came to the conclusion that this formula would be inadequate, since it makes no provision for termination of the existing export contracts. Their fear is that once the United States has facilities to use the full United States share of the water, the export of power may continue, using Canadian water. Despite the equal division of water, there would be an unequal division of power. The Canadian group then tried to obtain a provision to the effect that while exports of power under contract continued, the water used in Canada to produce that power would be regarded as water diverted by the United States. The United States officials refused to accept this, arguing that it would be improper to recognize private contracts in a treaty, and that this wording would mean that a private United States company, by entering into a contract to import power from Canada, could reduce the amount of water available on the United States side.

5. The suggestion was then made that a letter might be sent from the Canadian Embassy to the United States Department of State, pointing out that when the United States has facilities to use its full share of water the Canadian Government might not renew existing permits for the export of firm power at Niagara if that power is needed in Canada. The United States group agreed that this was a reasonable method of dealing with this problem, and indicated that the State Department would be willing to give a favourable acknowledgement to such a letter. To strengthen the hand of the Canadian Government the following phrase was inserted in the Preamble to the Treaty: "Desiring ... to make it possible for the United States of America and Canada to develop, for the benefit of their respective peoples, equal shares of the water of the Niagara River available for power purposes ..." The Chairman of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario has indicated that in his opinion the Ontario Government will not concur in the Niagara Diversion Treaty, unless it is accompanied by the sending of such a letter to the Department of State. A draft letter which might be suitable for this purpose is attached at Appendix C. This draft has been concurred in by the Department of Trade and Commerce.

6. The Prime Minister, in his letter of November 24, 1949, to the Premier of Ontario,[78] pointed out that an Agreement between Canada and Ontario would need to be concluded in connection with this Treaty. A draft Agreement is attached at Appendix D.† The Departments of Transport, Resources and Development, Justice, Finance, Public Works and Secretary of State have concurred in this draft.

7. The Chairman of the Hydro Electric Power Commission of Ontario, after consulting with the Premier of Ontario and the Chairman of the Niagara Parks Commission, has stated that the draft Treaty, draft letter regarding the export of power, and draft Canada-Ontario Agreement are satisfactory to Ontario.

8. If the Cabinet approves the draft Treaty and the draft Canada-Ontario Agreement, I think it would be appropriate to seek the formal approval of the Premier of Ontario to these drafts. However, the Canadian Ambassador has indicated that if the Treaty can be signed before February 27, there is a good prospect of approval by the United States Senate at this session. He has stressed the desirability of early action to take advantage of this prospect. The Cabinet might therefore wish to authorize signature of the Treaty while awaiting formal notification of Mr. Frost's approval.

9. The United States authorities have suggested that, to save time, the Treaty be signed in Washington. I suggest that the Canadian Ambassador might be authorized to sign the Treaty for Canada. I think it would be appropriate that the Canada-Ontario Agreement be signed by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Resources and Development.[79]

EXPORT OF POWER AT NIAGARA

Article V of the Boundary Waters Treaty of 1909 allocated to Canada 36,000 cubic feet per second, and to the United States 20,000 cubic feet per second, of the water of the Niagara River for power purposes. It seems to be evident that one reason why a differential of 16,000 cubic feet per second was established in Canada's favour was that some of the power plants in existence and under construction at Niagara at that time were designed to produce power for export to the United States.

2. Although the power produced on the Canadian side at Niagara by approximately 8600 cubic feet per second of the Canadian share of water is still being exported to the United States, the differential of 16,000 cubic feet per second in Canada's favour will be eliminated by the Niagara Diversion Treaty now under consideration. Article VI provides that:

"The waters made available for power purposes by the provisions of this Treaty shall be divided equally between the United States of America and Canada."

3. At the same time, however, Article VIII of the new Treaty reads:

"Until such time as there are facilities in the territory of one party to use its full share of the diversions of water for power purposes agreed upon in this Treaty, the other party may use the portion of that share for the use of which facilities are not available."

4. I should like you to know that, when the United States has the facilities to use the full United States share of the water made available by the Treaty, Canadian export licenses then in effect would not be renewed unless circumstances existing in Canada at that time make such a course desirable.

5. This would be in accordance with the intention expressed in the fourth paragraph of the Preamble to the Niagara Diversion Treaty, which reads in part as follows:

"Desiring ... to make it possible for the United States of America and Canada to develop, for the benefit of their respective peoples, equal shares of the waters of the Niagara River available for power purposes."

NIAGARA DIVERSION TREATY

With reference to the draft letter to be submitted before the signing of the Niagara Diversion Treaty Monday, February 27th, Snow told us today that State Department would not question the right of the Canadian Government to express its intent not to renew Canadian export licences for power when the United States has the facilities to use the full United States share of the water made available under the new Treaty. State Department hoped, however, that this would be done in such a form that it would not require ratification by the Senate together with the text of the Treaty. For this reason they have suggested that the form should be an aide mémoire and not a letter, and also that it should be a statement of intent on the part of the Canadian Government and not, repeat not, an interpretation of the Niagara Diversion Treaty.

2. The text of the draft letter, as given to Matthews in a telephone conversation Friday, February 24th, would, in the opinion of Snow, require very little change. The language of the operative paragraph beginning "I should like you to know that when the United States has the facilities ..." would have to be altered from the first person to the third person. The final paragraph beginning "This would be in accordance with the intent expressed in paragraph 4 of the preamble to the Niagara Diversion Treaty ..." would be liable to give rise to difficulties as the language proposed can be construed as an interpretation of the Treaty. Snow, therefore, hoped you might agree to having this paragraph omitted altogether. A suggested revision of the text drafted in the form of an aide mémoire is contained in my immediately following teletype.†

3. Snow also said it would be necessary for the State Department to make a reply to our aide mémoire, reserving its position in general terms. In explanation Snow said that while the United States Government fully recognized the right of the Canadian Government to terminate the export of power following the conclusion of the Niagara Diversion Treaty and to state its intent to do so before the Treaty is signed, the United States Government on its side would have to indicate that they would reserve the right to take whatever action may be required to protect United States interests in the event that export licenses are terminated.

4. As the drafting involved required legal advice and the Legal Adviser to the State Department is not available on Saturday morning, Snow has suggested a meeting at 9 o'clock Monday, 27th February, in his office to agree on the text of an aide mémoire and a United States acknowledgment.

2. A reply also dated February 24th was handed to us, reading as follows:

"The Department of State has taken note of the aide mémoire of the Canadian Embassy dated February 24th, 1950 regarding the Niagara Diversion Treaty. Without denying the right of the Canadian Government to reserve to its own people the use of the power developed by the Canadian share of the waters of the Niagara made available by the Treaty, which will be equal to the American share, the Department of State assumes that in the event of any refusal of export licenses for power produced from that share, due regard will be had to any contractual rights then existent, and in which American citizens or companies may have an interest."[80]

Following for Reid from Matthews, Begins: Your EX-420.† Niagara Diversion.

1. I called on Snow today to discuss with him the article in the Buffalo Evening News which reports the President as saying that he considers the Niagara Diversion Treaty and St. Lawrence Agreement as "one package".

2. State Department have sent a report on the Niagara Treaty to the President. Snow advises me that the message conveying the Treaty to the Senate is being drafted by the White House Staff and, therefore, State Department have no knowledge of its probable terms or of the date when it will be transmitted to the Senate. They expect the message to go to the Senate shortly and, in any event, before the hearings commence on the St. Lawrence Agreement.

3. Snow advised me that while much manoeuvring is going on behind the scenes in connection with the President's recommendation that a study should be made of Hydro-Electric developments in the New England States and New York State, the State Department is hopeful that the political difficulties resulting from that proposal will not interfere with the speedy ratification of the Niagara Treaty. The reference to "one package" in the Buffalo Evening News probably refers to the development of water power in both the Niagara and St. Lawrence by one publicly owned organization and not to the approval of the Treaty and the Agreement by Congress. As the Treaty goes only to the Senate and the Agreement to both Houses, it is hard to see how they could be treated as "one package" when being approved in Congress.

4. Snow stated, however, that he had no information whether the message to the Senate relating to the Niagara Treaty would refer to the question of who should develop the waters made available to the United States by the Treaty. He also said that he did not consider it would be appropriate for the State Department to make any representations to the White House on this point. Ends.

NIAGARA DIVERSION TREATY

Your WA-589 of March 9. I am disturbed by the report Matthews has sent concerning his talk with Snow about the possibility of the President linking some extraneous matter to the treaty in his message forwarding it to the Senate for ratification.

2. It is not clear to me whether Snow thinks that the message forwarding the Niagara Diversion Treaty to the Senate will include:

(a) Some reference to the desirability of early action being taken toward ratification of the St. Lawrence Agreement as well, or

(b) Some reference to the President's recommendation that a study should be made of hydro-electric development in the New England States and New York State, or

(c) Discussion of public versus private development of water that would be made available to the United States by the Treaty.

I would be glad to have some clarification if this can be obtained.

3. I don't think we have much information about the President's recommendation that a study be made of hydro-electric development in the New England States and New York State and would be glad if you could let us know more about this.

4. While we do not wish to discourage the President from pursuing tactics which he believes will promote support for ratification of the St. Lawrence Agreement, I am most concerned that no risk should be run that the Niagara Diversion Treaty may be hung up on some extraneous point introduced by the President in his message to the Senate. This would be contrary to our understanding and that of the Chairman of the Ontario Hydro. If ratification of the Niagara Diversion Treaty were hung up, the Canadian Government would be immediately subjected to pressure to press ahead with separate development of the International Rapids Section of the St. Lawrence waterway. And we are still very desirous to see the double-barrelled St. Lawrence water and power project go through.

5. I should like to have our concern in this matter brought to the attention of the White House. If Snow thinks it would be inappropriate for the State Department to present our views to the White House, I wonder if they would have any objection to your making a direct approach to one of the President's advisers who may be concerned with the preparation of the message to the Senate.

Your EX-428 of March 10th. Niagara Diversion Treaty.

1. I have discussed today with Webb, Under-Secretary of State, the tactics in presenting the Treaty to the Senate. Matthews has also discussed these matters with two Administrative Assistants to the President, one of whom will be with Mr. Truman in Florida when his message to the Senate is expected to be signed.

2. The message should go forward in less than a fortnight. Our informants agreed that it should deal with the Treaty as a question entirely separate from the St. Lawrence project and that it should dodge the issue of public versus private development. Webb observed that when hearings on the Treaty were held a position would have to be taken on both these questions, and the President would be bound to support public development of the power. He considers that discussion of this matter is inevitable before the Treaty is voted on in the Senate, and I am sure that he is right. Senator Aiken[81] of Vermont has already announced his opposition to early ratification of the Treaty on the grounds that it would delay action on the St. Lawrence project and that the Federal Government should develop the power at Niagara.

3. Within the supporters of public power development there is a split between those in New York State which want the New York Power Authority to be responsible and those in New England and Eastern Ohio who want Federal control. The Administration will have to take a position at the hearings, and this is almost certain to favour Federal control.

4. I urged on Webb very strongly our desire for ratification at this session and our concern lest purely domestic issues in this country should postpone the new Niagara development. He fully appreciates these points.

5. I shall report separately when additional information has been secured on the proposed study of power development in the New England States and New York. The need for such an overall study was cited last week by the Bureau of the Budget in informing the Congress of the President's opposition to the passage of a measure at this session dealing with the Passamaquoddy tidal project.

1. This afternoon Snow showed to Matthews a copy of the message to the Senate drafted in the State Department which Snow is confident will be signed by the President.

2. The only reference to public development of the United States share of the waters is in a paragraph that states that subsequent to ratification it will have to be decided what American authorities should develop the water and goes on to state that the President is on record concerning his opinion on this question.

3. The message continued by stating that it would not be proper to provide in a treaty for a question that was purely a domestic question within the United States. It then urges speedy ratification.

4. Snow was not ready to forecast when the message will reach the Senate.

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], June 7, 1950

RATIFICATION OF THE NIAGARA DIVERSION TREATY

The United States State Department have indicated to Mr. Wrong that early ratification by Canada of the Niagara Diversion Treaty might have a favourable effect on action on this Treaty in the United States Senate. They would like to be able to point to some concrete action such as this to support the case they intend to make of Ontario's urgent need of hydro-electric power. The State Department are also somewhat concerned about the fact that on numerous occasions recently where they have been urging Senate approval of agreements, the Senators have been asking what the other parties to the agreements have done. The usual reply, that the other parties are waiting to see what action is being taken by the United States, has been causing some irritation in Congress.

2. The Senate Foreign Relations Committee is expected to decide in about a week on the type of hearings that should be held. There is a possibility that these may be brief, and that the Treaty may be placed on the consent calendar for swift action on the Senate floor. If substantial opposition develops, public hearings will have to be held and ratification will be delayed. At the moment the United States authorities do not expect serious opposition and think there may be a good chance that the Treaty will be ratified without reservation.

3. In addition to the possibility that early ratification by Canada might have some favourable effect on proceedings in the United States Senate, there are three further reasons why such action might be desirable:

(a) Ratification by Canada of the Treaty as signed might assist the United States Administration to oppose the introduction by the Senate of alterations in the text. For example, the State Department might be able to point out that Canada had approved the Treaty and the Canadian Parliament had risen. If the Senate proposed alterations, the Treaty could not come into force until Parliament at its next session had had an opportunity to consider the proposed alterations.

(b) Early ratification by Canada would be a further assurance to Ontario of the Canadian Government's desire to bring the Treaty into effect as soon as possible.

(c) There is a possibility that the United States Senate might approve the Treaty after Parliament has risen. If Canadian ratification had not taken place, this could be somewhat embarrassing since the coming into force of the Treaty would have to await the next session of Parliament.

4. On the other hand, there are two arguments against this course:

(a) The United States Senate may not approve the Treaty this year; it is not certain that it will ever do so. The time that would be devoted by Parliament to consideration of this Treaty might prove to be wasted.

(b) The United States Senate might approve the Treaty, subject to certain alterations or reservations. In that case the amended text would have to be reconsidered by Parliament.

5. The Departments of Transport and Resources and Development are sceptical about the value of prior Canadian ratification, although they have indicated that they would not object to such action. They have in mind the fate of the 1929 Niagara Convention, which was ratified by Canada but failed to secure United States Senate approval, and the 1941 St. Lawrence Agreement. They doubt that Canadian ratification would have any effect on the United States Senate, and they believe that the Canadian Government has already given Ontario sufficient assurance of its desire to have the Treaty come into force as soon as possible. They are, of course, aware of the possibility that the United States Senate might approve the Treaty after Parliament has risen, but consider that the time that would then elapse before Parliament could approve the Treaty in its next session would not involve any serious delay in construction of new power plants by the Ontario Hydro. Once the United States had ratified the Treaty, the Ontario Hydro would have no real fear that Canada would not follow suit. In the meantime they could proceed with preparatory work.

6. Since there is thought to be some prospect of approval at this session of the United States Senate, I am inclined to the view that anything we can reasonably do to help the State Department persuade the Senate to act should be done. We have, with good reason, postponed ratification of such measures as the 1941 St. Lawrence Agreement and the Charter for an International Trade Organization, pending United States action. In the case of the Niagara Diversion Treaty, however, prior ratification by Canada can do no harm and might do some good. I do not think we should follow an inflexible practice of insisting on prior United States ratification of all important agreements with Canada.[82] There is unlikely to be any serious opposition in Parliament to this Treaty. It should not, therefore, take up very much of Parliament's time.

7. You might wish to discuss this with your Cabinet colleagues. If it is decided to seek the approval of Parliament at this session, you might also wish to discuss where this should be placed on the Order Paper. About ten days should be allowed for preparation of the Resolution and supporting material.[83]

L'ambassadeur aux États-Unis

Ambassador in United States to Secretary of State for External Affairs

Washington, July 11, 1950

Dear Mr. Pearson:

In our telephone conversation of July 8, you asked me if I would send you a letter, outlining the various steps taken by the Embassy since the signature of the Niagara Diversion Treaty to impress on the Administration our great concern that the Treaty should be ratified not later than this summer.

2. A survey of the Chancery files reveals that from the time of signature of the Treaty on February 27 until the President forwarded the Treaty to the Senate for ratification on May 2, myself, and members of my staff, were in touch with the State Department on several occasions to ensure that no foreign issue such as the St. Lawrence Power Development, would be raised in the President's message of transmittal, which could prejudice prompt ratification of the Treaty. I called on Under-Secretary of State Webb on March 13 to impress this point upon him. We also expressed our views on this matter informally to the Federal Power Commission and to two of the President's administrative assistants. It was at the instance of our representations that the Canadian Desk in the State Department, which had a hand in the drafting of the President's message, omitted from it controversial material which we had feared would be included, and also urged speedy ratification.

3. During the period from May 2 until hearings were held on June 27 by a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the ratification of the Treaty, we had more and frequent conversations with the State Department, during which we reaffirmed our desire that the Treaty be promptly ratified and ascertained the prospects of action by the Senate. On June 21, I called on Under-Secretary of State Webb for a second time. In my conversation, I told Mr. Webb that I thought my visit might give him a pretext for further pressure to obtain ratification at this session of Congress. He told me that the State Department had worked very hard to have the twin Lehman-Roosevelt bills introduced for the sole purpose of keeping consideration of the Niagara Treaty clear of the issue of public versus private power and thus ensure speedy ratification.

4. When a subcommittee of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee held hearings on ratification of the Treaty on June 27, both Matthews and Coté were in attendance and had an opportunity, both before and after the hearings, to mention again to [Adrian S.] Fisher, the Legal Adviser of the State Department, and Dale of the Canadian Desk, the importance which Canada attaches to ratification of the Treaty this summer. As on previous occasions, both showed that they were fully conscious of our urgent needs and were doing all they could to have them met.

5. Our last formal approach to the State Department was made on July 3 at your request. On that date, I wrote a letter to Under-Secretary Webb in which I quoted the text of your message EX-1049 of July 3† concerning the transfer of the labour force from Des Joachims to Niagara and also expressed the hope that the information contained in your communication may assist in securing early action by the Senate on the Treaty.

6. In addition to the numerous formal representations which I have described in this letter, members of my staff have been making several periodical enquiries from the Canadian Desk in the State Department, during the course of transacting other business, as regards the prospects of ratification of the Treaty at this session, and they have, on those occasions, reiterated the importance which the Canadian Government attaches to prompt ratification of the Treaty.

7. I am satisfied that the Administration, and particularly the State Department and Federal Power Commission, have been doing, and are doing, all they can to bring about ratification of the Treaty at this session of Congress. They are faced, however, with two serious obstacles. First, there is the ignorant yet weighty criticism of Chairman Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.[84] Because of this it may turn out that the Treaty cannot be reported without lengthy debate in Committee. This leads to the second obstacle, which is the shortage of time available to the Committee for considering the Treaty, owing to the heavy volume of work unexpectedly thrust upon it first by Senator McCarthy[85] and now by the developments in Korea.[86]

8. I fully appreciate the justification for the resentment which some Canadian newspapers will not fail to air should the U.S. Senate fail to ratify the Treaty at this session. On the other hand, the voicing of righteous indignation on the part of the Canadian press may be an effective way by which the U.S. Congress may be made to see that good-neighbourly relations between our two countries cannot be a unilateral proposition, with the Congress holding back on reasonable requests for action urgently required by Canada.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

Reference your EX-1104 of July 11th.† Niagara Diversion Treaty.

1. We had a further conversation yesterday with the Canadian Desk concerning the prospect of Senate action on the treaty during this session. They said that the estimate which they had obtained that morning from the Congressional Liaison Division in the State Department was that the chances are 55 to 45 that the Senate will take favourable action. This estimate is the least favourable since the treaty was sent to the Senate on May 2nd.

2. They mentioned the difficulties encountered by the State Department on the hill in connection with the attitude of Chairman Connally of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, and the upsetting result on the Committee timetable of the developments in Korea. In addition to these difficulties, they thought that the fate of the treaty would be affected by the emotions generated on the hill by other bills concerning power development. Whereas the State Department entertained the hope, some weeks ago, that the Lehman-Roosevelt bills might keep the issue of public vs. private power out of the consideration of the Niagara Treaty, they now fear that the bills may have the opposite effect. The Canadian Desk were also apprehensive lest the proposed St. Lawrence project, and the proposed commission to survey land and water resources in the New England States and New York (see my despatch No. 711 of March 18th†) may serve to confuse the Senators on what is really involved in approving ratification of the Niagara Treaty.

3. Our informant told us in confidence that for the past two weeks the State Department representatives on the hill have been unsuccessful in meeting Senator Connally in order to impress upon him the importance which the State Department attaches to the ratification of the treaty this session. He has twice cancelled engagements which they had made with him. They are hoping that they may meet him later this week. The State Department are also hoping to secure action by enlisting the good offices of Senator Lodge of Massachusetts. As of now, they are not quite clear whether Senator Connally's criticism is based on genuine opposition to the treaty. They told us that in the event that they should not obtain satisfactory results from Senator Connally, it is their firm intention to carry the issue to the White House as a last resort.

4. As an indication that the State Department have made great efforts on the hill to secure approval, the Canadian Desk mentioned that some Senators had already privately complained that they now knew all they wanted to know about the treaty and did not care to be approached further. Our informant also showed us in strict confidence a paper prepared in the State Department, which is to be circulated without indication of its source among the members of the Senate. This paper describes the diplomatic representations, both formal and informal, made to the State Department by the Canadian Government to obtain early ratification of the treaty. It refers to the critical needs of the province of Ontario for power and to the impossibility of securing additional power at Niagara except through the concurrence of the United States.

5. After describing the importance of this power for possible production of war material in Ontario, the paper concluded that failure of the Senate to act at this session would cause serious "irritation" in Canada, "one of our most reliable allies", at a time when Canada's co-operation is so sorely needed.

6. The discussion described above took place yesterday morning. Yesterday afternoon I encountered [Jack K.] McFall, Assistant Secretary of State in charge of Congressional relations, who before I had a chance of opening the subject assured me that he now felt more optimistic than ever before that the Senate would act very shortly. He ascribed Senator Connally's criticisms to irritation arising from indigestion and said that he was now feeling better.

7. It is evident, I think, that the State Department can scarcely be expected to do more to hasten ratification. I have considered tackling Senator Connally direct and have mentioned this to Mr. Webb. He expressed doubt that it would be helpful and asked me not to do so without further consultation with him. I shall take the matter up with him again if no progress is made within the next ten days or so.

RESERVATION BY THE UNITED STATES SENATE TO NIAGARA DIVERSION TREATY

The Niagara Diversion Treaty providing for the apportionment of the waters of the Niagara River for hydro-electric development, was signed by Canada and the United States of America on February 27, 1950.

2. On March 27, 1950 the Government of Canada and the Government of Ontario signed an Agreement concerning the implementation of Canada's rights and obligations under the Treaty.

3. On June 14, 1950, the House of Commons passed a Resolution approving both Agreements. The Senate passed the Resolution on June 19.

4. On August 9 the United States Senate passed a Resolution approving the ratification of the Treaty by the United States, with the following reservation:

"The United States, on its part, expressly reserves the right to provide by Act of Congress for redevelopment, for the public use and benefit, of the United States' share of the waters of the Niagara River made available by the provisions of the Treaty, and no project for redevelopment of the United States' share of such waters shall be undertaken until it be specifically authorized by Act of Congress".

5. This reservation does not constitute a reservation in the sense in which that term is used in international law and practice because it in no way affects Canada's rights or obligations under the Treaty. It concerns the implementation of the Treaty within the United States only, by providing for the method by which the United States' share of the waters, according to the terms of the Treaty, shall be used within that country. Where Parliament has already approved a particular treaty, it would seem that a subsequent reservation to that treaty, made by another Government and substantially affecting Canada's rights or obligations under it, should be submitted to Parliament because such a reservation would be tantamount to an amendment of the treaty. However, the above-mentioned reservation does not come within that category and would seem therefore not to require parliamentary approval.

6. The United States Government has enquired whether this reservation is acceptable to the Canadian Government and asks that the text of the reservation and the Canadian Government's acceptance be included in the Protocol of Exchange of Ratifications which will be signed at Ottawa. There does not seem to be any reason why Canada should refuse to accept this reservation. Canada's acceptance could be included in the Protocol of Exchange as suggested.

7. It is therefore recommended:

(a) That there is no need to refer the reservation to Parliament;

(b) That the Canadian Government accept the reservation;

(c) That the Government of Ontario be informed of Canada's acceptance of this reservation before the United States Government is notified.[87]

Order in Council

P.C. 1479 [March 23, 1950]

The Committee of the Privy Council have had before them a report dated 14th March 1950, from the Secretary of State for External Affairs, representing:

That, for the purpose of furthering the well-being of Canadian and United States fishermen engaged in the halibut fishery of the North Pacific Ocean, provision has been made by Order in Council year by year over a period of time for granting United States halibut fishing vessels the privilege of landing catches and obtaining supplies, repairs and equipment in Canadian Pacific ports, in return for the same privilege being granted to Canadian halibut fishing vessels in Alaska by United States public law approved annually by Congress;

That the United States Government proposed in July 1949 that the two Governments should sign a Convention providing for a formal exchange of these port privileges to overcome the difficulty and uncertainty involved in such frequent action by Congress;

That such a Convention would be to the advantage of the Canadian fishing industry which would be assured in advance of the fishing season of the privileges that would be available;

That this Convention would grant halibut fisherman of the United States of America and Canada, in the ports of entry of each other country on the Pacific Coast, the following privileges:

(1) To land their catches of halibut and sable-fish without the payment of duties and

(a) sell them locally on payment of the applicable customs duty;

(b) trans-ship them in bond under customs supervision to any part of either country; or

(c) sell them in bond for export; and

(2) to obtain supplies, repairs and equipment, subject to compliance with applicable customs and navigation laws of either country;

That this proposed Convention, a copy of which is hereto annexed,† would differ from the present practice only in that it proposes the extension of the reciprocal privileges to Canadian halibut vessels in ports of the United States proper as well as of Alaska, this addition being to the advantage of Canadian fishermen;

That the United States Government has agreed to the said annexed draft Convention; and

That the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of National Revenue have concurred that it is in the Canadian interest that such a Convention be entered into by Canada as soon as possible.

The Committee, therefore, on the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, advise that Your Excellency may be pleased to authorize the Honourable Lester B. Pearson, M.P., and the Honourable R.W. Mayhew, M.P., or either of them to negotiate and sign on behalf of Canada the annexed Convention or one in substantially the same terms.[88]

RATIFICATION OF THE INTERNATIONAL NORTHWEST ATLANTIC FISHERIES CONVENTION, AND THE RECIPROCAL PORT PRIVILEGES CONVENTION ON THE PACIFIC COAST

Last November, Cabinet directed that an Interdepartmental Committee be set up to consider the general position of Canadian territorial waters, and the ratification of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Convention which had been signed in Washington on February 8, 1949.[89] Some concern had been expressed whether, by ratifying this Convention, Canada might possible jeopardize any claim it might put forward to the effect that waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence are Canadian territorial waters as a result of the Union of Newfoundland with Canada.

2. The Committee under the Chairmanship of Mr. Norman Robertson was established and is known as the Interdepartmental Committee on Territorial Waters. At a recent meeting the Committee was of the view that Canada should proceed with the ratification of the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Convention. The Committee also recommended that, when ratifying, the Government should attach an observation (not in the nature of a reservation) which would indicate that Canadian ratification extends to Newfoundland, and that the "non obstante" clause in the Convention must be construed in the sense that it does not alter any claim that Canada may have to territorial waters.

3. The Committee considered the drafting of Article I of this Convention, describing the Convention area, which reads in part as follows:

> "... thence in a southerly direction along the coast of Labrador to the southern terminus of its boundary with Quebec; thence in a westerly direction along the coast of Quebec, and in an easterly and southerly direction along the coasts of New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, and Cape Breton Island to Cabot Strait; thence along the coasts of Cape Breton Island, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, and Rhode Island to the point of beginning ...".

4. It was noted that the reference to Cape Breton Island was improper by having been included in a delimitation by political entities. It was also felt that the reference was redundant, since the Convention boundary line is already described as running to Cabot Strait. This was a minor point which could be corrected at the time of Canadian ratification in the form of a statement or observation rectifying the geographical inaccuracy.

5. The Committee felt that the inaccuracy mentioned in the preceding paragraph may not be politically desirable, but the Legal Advisers of the Departments of Fisheries and External Affairs agreed that there was no legal objection to the wording. In a memorandum dated April 14, 1950† it was submitted to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that it may be best just to overlook this inaccuracy, because an endeavour to correct it by means of a formal statement would only tend to emphasize it, and if a correction were made in the formal text itself it would necessitate the signing of the Convention again by countries who had already signed it. The Secretary of State for External Affairs agreed with the above submission, as well as with the points outlined in paragraph 2 and 3 of this paper.

6. The Department of Fisheries have now expressed the hope that the recently signed Convention regarding Reciprocal Port Privileges for Halibut Fishing Vessels on the Pacific Coast will be ratified as soon as possible. Early ratification on the part of Canada might have a favourable influence on the proceedings in the United States Senate when the approval of that body is sought. Early ratification of the Convention by both countries would be desirable, since the halibut fishing season opens on May 1. Representations to this effect have in fact already been made to the State Department by our representative in Washington, and the Department has now been informed that it would be reasonable to expect United States ratification of the Port Privileges Convention to be completed by the middle of May.

7. The Department of Fisheries has also pointed out that the Canadian Government might perhaps be placing itself in a somewhat embarrassing position vis-à-vis the United States Government if it were to ratify the Port Privileges Convention without at the same time taking steps to ratify the Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Convention. The latter Convention has already been ratified by the United States. The Departments of Fisheries and External Affairs feel, therefore, that both Conventions should be ratified at the same time.

8. The question has arisen whether the ratification of these Conventions should be approved by Parliament. When a treaty or convention is not of widespread political importance and its implementation requires no new Canadian legislation, it is not customary to present it to Parliament for approval. Under these circumstances, the usual practice is to obtain Council approval for ratification. No new legislation is necessary at the present time to give effect to these Conventions, but the officials of the two Departments concerned are not sure of the political importance of the Conventions. The Office of the Minister of Fisheries has indicated that Mr. Mayhew would be inclined to favour the submission of the question to Parliament rather than only to Cabinet.

9. Parliamentary approval of the signing or ratifying of important treaties is usually obtained by the presentation of a Resolution to both Houses of Parliament. The Minister of Fisheries would seem to be the appropriate Minister to sponsor a Resolution in connection with these Conventions. Mr. Mayhew, however, will be leaving Ottawa around May 6 and will be away for over a month. The Secretary of State for External Affairs will be absent from Ottawa for the greater part of May. It is unlikely that such a Resolution could be prepared for presentation to and approval by Parliament within less than ten days.

10. If Cabinet decides that Parliamentary approval is not politically necessary in this instance, it would be a matter of seeking authorization from Council for the Secretary of State for External Affairs to sign the Instruments of Ratification and of having the Instruments deposited. If, on the contrary, Cabinet feels that Parliamentary approval would be preferable, the Department of Fisheries will be responsible for having the required Resolution presented to Parliament as soon as possible.[90]

MILITARY RELIEF — SETTLEMENT OF CANADIAN CLAIMS AGAINST ITALY

Canadian policy regarding claims against European countries for military relief was set forth in P.C. 3065 of July 31, 1947.† A copy of that document is attached. In paragraph 5 (a) (iii), the Canadian claim against Italy is set at 5.4 per cent of the total bill rendered to Italy for military relief supplies, i.e. $28,400,000.00 (U.S. dollars).

2. On May 15, 1947, the Government of Italy was advised of the shares of the United States, United Kingdom and Canada in the total military relief bill, including the Canadian share mentioned above. The bill was reckoned in U.S. dollars, but the actual forms of settlement were to be agreed by each of the three countries with Italy.

3. On April 15, 1947, the Italian Representative in Ottawa was informed that in view of the difficult financial position of the Italian Government, the Canadian Government proposed to request no more than a "nominal settlement".[1] This policy was confirmed in P.C. 3065 (attached).†

4. The United Kingdom and the United States both waived their military relief claims against Italy. The United Kingdom action was made conditional on ratification of the Italian Peace Treaty by the Italian Government and was taken as a political goodwill gesture. The United States waived its claim of $390,500,000 as part of a comprehensive Agreement with Italy on August 24, 1947, shortly before the Italian post-war elections. The Agreement also provided for the unfreezing of Italian properties and assets, the turning over to Italy of twenty-eight merchant ships and the payment by Italy of $5,000,000 to settle claims of United States nationals. The purposes of the Agreement were said to be to ease the "burdensome clauses" of the Peace Treaty and to contribute to Italy's peacetime economy.

5. In view of the fact that the United Kingdom and the United States have waived their claims the Italians have expressed the hope that Canada will accept one dollar as "nominal settlement". When the United Kingdom and the United States were waiving their claims they invited Canada to do the same. It was felt, however, that such a gesture by Canada would not carry much political weight in Italy and that Canada's financial contribution to post-war European recovery could better be made in other ways. In addition the effect on Canada's post-war claims against other countries, some of them allies throughout the war, had to be considered.

6. I do not think that we should insist on payment from Italy in dollars; however, the Canadian Government expects to have a number of uses for lira. Those include the purchase, repair and furnishing of a Canadian Chancery and a residence for the Canadian Ambassador in Rome, the current operating expenses of Canadian Government departments, and the operation of a cultural and educational programme in Italy similar to the one envisaged in our settlement of military relief and other accounts with the Netherlands. Funds needed for these purposes will probably amount to about 10 per cent of our claim against Italy and I feel that, under the circumstances in this case, we can consider this to constitute a "nominal settlement".

7. In view of these considerations, I recommend:

(a) that negotiations be conducted with the Government of Italy for settlement of Canada's claims in respect of military relief;

(b) that, in the first instance, our claim should be written down from $28,400,000 (U.S.) to $3,000,000 (U.S.);

(c) that the claim be further reduced to a figure of no less than $2,000,000 (U.S.) if this proves to be desirable in the course of negotiations;

(d) that payment be accepted in Italian lira at the rate of exchange current between United States dollars and lira current at the times of payment; and

(e) that provision be made for expenditure of the lira received in payment for the purchase, repair and furnishing of a Canadian Chancery and a residence for the Canadian Ambassador in Rome, the current operating expenses of Canadian Government departments, and the operation of a cultural and educational programme in Italy.[2]

SETTLEMENT OF MILITARY RELIEF CLAIMS — VISIT TO EUROPE OF MR. JAMES SINCLAIR, PARLIAMENTARY ASSISTANT TO THE MINISTER OF FINANCE

The Minister of Finance will probably be raising this matter for discussion in Cabinet in the near future.

2. The time has come when most of our claims on account of military relief against European countries can probably be settled fairly quickly. Most of the settlements will necessarily involve:

(a) Some write-off of the total amount, and

(b) Acceptance of local currencies (instead of Canadian or American dollars) involving special provision for using such currencies for purchase of property and equipment, and probably in some cases for a cultural and educational programme.

3. There may be difficulties in explaining these arrangements in Parliament. Therefore, the Department of Finance has decided that Mr. Sinclair should take some part in the negotiations. He is planning to leave Canada on January 14th and will be away until the end of February. He will be accompanied by the Department of Finance expert on these matters, Mr. C.L. Read. He will visit the following countries: Belgium, Luxembourg, France, Italy, Denmark and Norway. He will probably visit Yugoslavia and possibly Greece. He will also have some conversations in London. He plans to sail for Canada about the end of February. Mr. Sinclair's visit to Greece will depend on whether political conditions there make it worthwhile. The Greek Government fell two days ago.

4. Mr. Sinclair's visit to Yugoslavia may give rise to special discussion in Cabinet. There are possible objections to such a visit. The Communist press may play up the visit of a Canadian in his position as further evidence that the West is trying to seduce Mr. Tito. Certain sections of the Canadian public might be opposed to any official visit to an Iron Curtain country. On the other hand it can probably be made quite clear that Mr. Sinclair is going on business and is visiting a large number of other countries. He may bring back useful impressions of developments in Yugoslavia. His presence would certainly strengthen the negotiations which our Ambassador, Mr. Vaillancourt, would otherwise have to undertake on his own. Mr. Sinclair himself is very anxious to go. On balance it is probably desirable that he should do so.

[2] Approuvé par le Cabinet, le 5 janvier 1950 sous réserve que les dispositions concernant les fonds reçus en règlement puissent être réexaminées.
Approved by Cabinet on January 5, 1950 on the understanding that the disposition of any funds received in settlement would be the subject of further consideration.

5. The financial negotiations which Mr. Sinclair, and Mr. Read, and officials of this Department will undertake, will require some form of Cabinet authorization. For this purpose the countries affected have fallen into two groups.

(i) Mediterranean countries: Italy, Greece and Yugoslavia. Cabinet has, within the last few weeks, approved negotiations with Italy and Yugoslavia,[3] including a range within which settlement may take place. In the case of Greece a draft memorandum for submission to Cabinet will be put up to you within the next few days.

(ii) Northern European countries: Belgium, Luxembourg, France, Denmark and Norway. Our officials have reviewed with officials of the Department of Finance a memorandum covering proposed settlements and proposed range for negotiations with all these countries, and have agreed on its terms. A copy of this memorandum is attached. It is understood that the Minister of Finance will discuss the substance of this memorandum in Cabinet and get general approval for it.

PROPOSED ITEMS OF SETTLEMENT AND SUGGESTED RANGE FOR NEGOTIATIONS

BELGIUM

Less adjustments proportionate to those given by the U.K. (but not including claim by Belgium for handling charges on military relief supplies)	716,377.06

(b) At termination of hostilities Belgium was in a better position than most European countries.

(c) Payments between Canada and Belgium were maintained on a cash basis rather than brought under mutual aid arrangements. Accordingly, Canada settled in full, by payments to Belgium totalling over $50,000,000, for goods and services and local currencies supplied by Belgium to the Canadian army.

(d) Under the agreement of 1946[4] it was recognized that settlement of the military relief claim was still outstanding.

(e) Belgium requested continuation of military relief beyond July 1945 as a convenience for handling and obtaining priorities for supplies pending re-establishment of normal commercial channels.

(f) The Belgium Government has expressed the hope that Canadian authorities will grant it terms as favourable as those Holland obtained. The Canadian Ambassador has advised them that the two cases are not considered comparable.

(g) In view of Belgium's present general economic and foreign exchange position it is felt that settlement should be made immediately in cash for a large portion of the adjusted claim.

(h) Belgium is at present depositing in a Canadian Government account 300,000 francs per month on account. Earlier Belgium had agreed to deposit on request 11,000,000 francs for the purpose of acquiring a property in Brussels.

2. Proposed Terms of Settlement

(a) That an adjustment in the claim be accepted on the basis of reductions negotiated between Belgium and the United Kingdom (excluding the claim in respect of handling charges already settled for under the 1946 agreement.)

(b) That deposits of Belgian francs be accepted from time to time as required, with appropriate protection against changes in exchange rates, in amounts sufficient to meet current expenditures of Canadian Government Departments in Belgium during the E.C.A. period.

It is proposed that we agree to accept such deposits on the basis of U.S. $20,000 per month for the period May 1949 to December 1951, a total of U.S. $640,000 — the deposits to be credited at the current par value of Belgium francs at the time of deposit in terms of U.S. dollars. (The estimated annual expenditures of the Canadian Government in Belgium is approximately $245,000.)

(c) That the balance (U.S. $6,460,085.52) be paid immediately in U.S. funds.

3. Range for Negotiations

(a) Belgium is likely to request a write-down of the claim comparable to that obtained by the Netherlands.

No concession should be made in this respect. The two cases cannot be considered comparable. The settlement with the Netherlands involved items other than the military relief claim and the Canadian Government has in its post-war relations with Belgium always considered the military relief claim on Belgium as a firm claim.

(b) Belgium may propose that the claim be considered in

(i) Canadian dollars, or

(ii) Belgium francs prior to devaluation.

[4] Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1946, N° 33./See Canada, Treaty Series, 1946, No. 33.

No concession should be made on this point. The Belgians have made little effort to settle this claim prior to devaluation or when the Canadian dollar was at par. The Canadian proposals contained in Despatch No. 240 of July 26, 1949 to the Canadian Ambassador in Brussels suggested settlement in Canadian dollars at a time when the Canadian dollar was at par with the U.S. dollar. If these proposals were forwarded to the Belgian Government no reply has been received. (If the claim was treated in terms of Canadian dollars prior to devaluation, this would involve a reduction of approximately $710,000; if it was treated in terms of Belgian francs, this would involve a reduction of a little over $1,000,000.)

(c) The Belgian Government has already offered to deposit 11,000,000 francs to be used for the purchase of a property in Brussels. They may propose that at least this amount be paid in francs in addition to the proposal above. It is suggested that if a property may be acquired within the next year or two and the Belgians press, we might agree to accept the equivalent in francs to, say, U.S. $200,000. If accepted, however, some understanding should be reached that if a suitable property cannot be acquired, the Belgian Government will consider conversion of this amount, or in part, into currencies of other OEEC countries.

(d) Belgium may request a postponement of the payments in U.S. dollars to some future date, possibly on terms comparable to those given by the U.S. or by the Canadian Governments under their credits.

We should not agree to postponement of payments. Canada settled promptly her obligation to Belgium immediately after the war. Canadian credits to Belgium (and other countries) are already considerably higher relatively than those provided by the U.S. and other countries.

LUXEMBOURG

1. General

(a) Canada's Claim ..... $439,309.14 (U.S.)

Luxembourg has stated that it obtained downward adjustments of 28.25% by the U.S. and 17.5% by the U.K.; they propose reductions of 20% by Canada.

2. Proposed Terms of Settlement

Terms for final settlement should be the same as (a) and (c) under Belgium.

3. Range for Canadians

(a) Luxembourg may ask that a portion or all of the claim be paid in Belgium francs. In correspondence to date they have referred to the claim in terms of Belgium francs. Any such payments accepted should not be in a larger percentage than that accepted in case of Belgium and its uses should be subject to the same provisions agreed upon with Belgium.

(b) Any other concessions made should not be more favourable that given to Belgium.

FRANCE

1. General

	U.S. $
(a) Canada's Claim:
France	12,389,021.85

France, French zone of Germany and Austria 1,066,399.13
$13,455,414.98

(b) Under a financial agreement of December 3, 1945 between the U.K. and France, France was given until September 1951 to settle the military relief and certain other indebtedness to the U.K. There has apparently been no negotiations between the two countries on the claim. It is considered that Canada should not press for a final settlement with France at the present time. Firstly, we would not wish to prejudice the position of either the United Kingdom or France in the settlement of this much larger claim. Secondly, we have followed the policy of making adjustments in the claim comparable to that accepted by the United Kingdom.

(c) It is felt that pending a final settlement, arrangements should be made for interim payments by France in French francs to meet particularly:

(i) current expenses of the Canadian Government in France (estimated at approximately $460,000 per year),

(ii) purchase of properties, repairs, and alterations (estimated at $700,000),

(iii) purchase of furnishings in France for missions in other countries.

2. Proposed Terms for Interim Arrangement

(a) French francs to be deposited in a Canadian Government account from time to time on request, in amounts not to exceed in aggregate a total value of, say, $4,000,000 (U.S.).

(b) Any French francs so transferred to the Canadian Government will be credited in terms of U.S. dollars at the exchange rate established in conformity with procedures of the International Monetary Fund, or if no such rate exists, at the rate used in official French Government transactions at the time of such transfer.

(c) The deposits may be used by the Canadian Government to acquire or improve real property for Canadian Government use, for current expenditures of the Canadian Government in France, by Canadians in France for educational and cultural purposes. (An understanding should be reached, if possible, with the French Government that this agreement does not preclude the purchase of furnishings for use by the Canadian Government in missions of other countries.)

1. General

(a) Canada's Claim ..... 565,200.91 (U.S.)

Less adjustments (subject to check with the U.K.) amounting to approximately $65,000 to $70,000.

(b) In July 1948 the Danish Government indicated willingness to settle a portion of the claim in kroner and pending their final audit of accounts made a deposit of 1,000,000 kroner on March 1, 1949. This has been used in current expenditures in Denmark and recently for the purchase of property there. In May the Danish Government indicated that it considered the balance owing was approximately 1,350,000 kroner and proposed to pay a further 1,000,000 kroner and the balance in U.S. dollars. We delayed consideration of this proposal pending working out with Denmark adjustments in the claim and pending getting on further with the purchase of a property there. In August the Danish Government provided details of their proposed reductions in the claim. In September the kroner was devalued.

2. Proposed Terms of Settlement

(a) That a further 1,000,000 kr. be accepted from time to time as required (or immediately, if desired by the Danish Government) and credited in the equivalent value of U.S. dollars, to be used

(i) for current expenditures of the Canadian Government in Denmark,

(ii) 150,000 kr. to be converted into French francs for the purchase of furnishings in France,

(iii) by Canadians for educational and cultural purposes,

(iv) for conversion by mutual agreement into other soft currencies.

(b) That the balance be paid in U.S. dollars.

3. Range for Canadians

(a) The Danes refer to the claim in terms of kroner. Under their previous proposal, at pre-devaluation rates of exchange, they were prepared to make a payment in U.S. dollars after 1951 of approximately $76,600. If post-devaluation rates are used, the balance payable in U.S. dollars, after a further deposit of 1,000,000 kroner, would amount to approximately $140,000. In view of the fact that Denmark offered to make a settlement prior to devaluation, they will undoubtedly object to paying this additional amount.

Some concession should probably be made on this point. It is suggested that, first, it be proposed that current rates of conversion be applied but that the dollar payment should not be higher than under the original proposal and the increase be paid instead in additional kroner deposits. Secondly, we should be prepared, if necessary, to agree to settle on pre-devaluation rates of exchange.

NORWAY

1. General

(a) Canada's Claim ..... $1,703,098.23 (U.S.)

(b) Norwegian officials have indicated:

(i) That they do not consider their agreement with the United Kingdom an appropriate basis on which to discuss the Canadian claim;

(ii) That they will wish to examine and discuss all the vouchers pertaining to the claim concerning the real value of the supplies furnished;

(iii) That the claim would have to be negotiated on a non-dollar basis.

2. Proposed Terms of Settlement

(a) That we agree to downward adjustments in the claim comparable to those agreed upon by the U.K., or on a basis not more favourable than adjustments accepted in previous agreements (the Netherlands, Belgium and Denmark).

(b) That 9,000,000 kroner (approximately $1,260,000 U.S.) be accepted in partial payment, to be credited in terms of U.S. dollars at the par rate of exchange, from time to time as requested, — the balance to be paid in U.S. dollars after 1951. (The ratio of kroner to dollar payments noted above would be roughly comparable to the proposals in the case of Denmark.)

(c) That such deposits of kroner may be used

(i) for the purchase of property, etc.,

(ii) for expenditures of the Canadian Government in Norway,

(iii) by Canadians for educational and cultural purposes,

(iv) for conversion into currencies of all OEEC countries (with possibly a specified amount for conversion into French francs for the purpose of purchasing furnishings in France).

(d) That the Norwegian Government agree to assist in the acquisition by the Canadian Government of a property in Oslo.

3. Range for Canadians

It may be necessary to be prepared to accept total payment in kroner.[5]

Reference your telegram No. 148 of December 11th† about military relief credits. Italian Foreign Office has now rejected the proposal for separate negotiations for military relief credits and peace treaty matters and insists that they be linked. I have failed to secure alteration of this decision by appeal to Sforza. It is clear that the Italians will not make reasonable settlement of military relief account unless we give them some valuable concessions. Our only possible concession is release of Italian assets.[6] In my view, retention of these assets will not secure more favourable treatment for our war damage claims than that to be accorded the British and Americans and there is little prospect of rapid settlement of these claims. As described in my despatch No. 308 of July 14th,† the U.K., France and the United States are making joint approaches to Italy urging the same procedure for all claimants. Because of her bargaining power, participation of United States in common front is safeguard for claimants, including Canadians. The only danger is possibility of a separate United States agreement, about which you might enquire in Washington. Offer to release assets would, therefore, be better employed as lever to secure favourable settlement of military relief. At Foreign Office I gathered that military relief credits settlement might be reached quickly if we undertook release of assets. I suggest we ask $2,000,000 as settlement of account and be prepared to accept $1,500,000 provided agreement be put into effect not later than March 15th, on

TELEGRAM 6 Ottawa, January 12, 1950

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following for Désy from Heeney, Begins: Your Telegram No. 4 of January 10 — Military Relief Credits.

1. We are amazed that the Italian Foreign Office should at this stage attempt to link negotiations regarding military credits with Peace Treaty matters and that you could not make it clear to Count Sforza that they must continue to be kept separate.

2. The Treaty of Peace with Italy is an international multilateral agreement signed by Canada and Italy and formally ratified by both countries. The Canadian Government is not prepared to have the settlement of other matters, such as military relief, made contingent upon implementation of that treaty. In the past we have been discussing in Ottawa with Signor di Stephano the implementation of some clauses of the treaty. These discussions have proceeded satisfactorily and we intend to continue them.

3. Separate discussions regarding military relief have proceeded in Rome between yourself and the Italian authorities there. We see no reason for transferring them to Ottawa.

4. The Canadian Government intends to negotiate all military relief settlements in the European capitals and not in Ottawa. To assist in these negotiations Mr. James Sinclair, Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance, will leave Ottawa at the end of this week, accompanied by an expert from the Department of Finance. He will visit all countries where we have military relief settlements to make. He plans to reach Rome early in February. Within a day or two you will receive our despatch No. 20 of January 9† with full details.

5. The countries with which we expect to conclude military relief settlements in addition to Italy are: France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Denmark, Norway, Yugoslavia and Greece. Some of them have indicated that, on account of disturbed economic conditions, they expect to find great difficulty in making payment in full in dollars, and we are very ready to take account of such considerations. In making arrangements with them for negotiations all of them have readily accepted our approach, appreciating that military relief represented goods supplied by Canada to prevent starvation and disease amongst their own civilian populations.

6. It is not reasonable to suggest that we should negotiate with Italy on a more favourable basis than with other countries. We have already indicated to the Italians, both through you and in Ottawa, that we are aware of their economic and political difficulties and are, therefore, not going to press for anything like full settlement of our military relief claim. However, we cannot make special concessions under the Italian Peace Treaty in order to arrive at a settlement on military relief account with Italy.

7. I am asking Signor di Stephano to call on me later today. I shall give him an aide mémoire† containing the views expressed in this telegram. Ends.

IMMEDIATE

Reference your telegram No. 7 of January 10th.† Belgo/Canadian negotiations on military relief credits. Tentative agreement was reached today by Sinclair and Read with Jacqmin, as set forth in the following draft text:

Agreement between the Canadian and Belgian Governments for Settlement of Outstanding Canadian Credit related to Military Relief to Belgian Civilian Population.

(1) The summary of bills for civilian affairs supplies (military relief) delivered to the Belgian Government established by C.C.A.L.A. amounts to U.S. $156,449,251.50. The Canadian share being 5% amounts to U.S. $7,822,462.58. After the policy of examination of bills, Canadian Government has agreed on adjustments totalling U.S. $716,377.06, thus reducing the Belgian debt to U.S. $7,106,085.52. Furthermore, although claim has been outstanding for several years, the Canadian Government has agreed to waive all interest charges in respect of settlement.

(2) The two Governments agree that payments will take place as follows:
(a) The Belgian Government will put at the disposal of the Canadian Government from time to time as requested an aggregate amount in Belgian francs equivalent to U.S. $200,000 for acquisition, improvement or furnishings of official buildings in Belgian or, if so desired, in Europe as far as furnishings are concerned. These funds may also be used in Belgium at the request of the Canadian Government for cultural and educational purposes. The Canadian Government will have the right to claim payment in dollars of any unused balance of these funds as of December 31st, 1952.

(b) An amount equivalent to U.S. $640,000, to be used in Belgium or the Grand Duchy of Luxembourg for Canadian Government expenditures, will be paid in Belgian francs by the Belgian Government to the Canadian Government over a period from May 1st, 1949, to December 31st, 1951, in periodical amounts not to exceed average of U.S. $20,000 per month.

(c) The remainder of the debt, that is U.S. $6,266,085.52 will be paid in three instalments as follows: U.S. $2,266,085.52 on April 1st, 1950, U.S. $2,000,000 on September 1st, 1950, U.S. $2,000,000 on March 1st, 1951.

(3) Any francs provided in this agreement will be credited at the par value existing at the time of each payment between the Belgian franc and the U.S. dollar, established in conformity with procedures of the International Monetary Fund or, if no such par value exists, at a rate mutually agreed upon by the two Governments.

(4) Any dollar payments made under this agreement shall be in U.S. dollars, or equivalent in Canadian dollars acquired in the same manner as that provided under Clause (9) of the Supplementary Financial Agreement between the Government of Canada and the Government of Belgium signed at Ottawa on October 24th, 1947.[7] Any Canadian dollar payments will be credited at par value existing at the time of each payment, between the Canadian dollar and the U.S. dollar as established in conformity with procedures of the International Monetary Fund or, if no such par value exists, at a rate mutually agreed upon by the Governments. Ends.

2. You will note from paragraph (2)(c) above that, whilst full dollar payment will be made within the single Canadian fiscal year 1950/51, it will permit the Belgians to effect payment over two Belgian fiscal years, namely 1950 and 1951.

3. Jacqmin hopes to obtain approval to the foregoing text, suitably polished, some time tomorrow.

4. I have reason to believe that Belgian preference would be to have the agreement initialed but signed in Ottawa between the Minister for External Affairs and the Belgian Ambassador.

5. Would appreciate receiving your concurrence with the foregoing by Thursday morning at the latest,[8] as arrangement with Luxembourg necessitates leaving Brussels for Luxembourg early Thursday afternoon. Ends.

Zoppi[9] telephoned this morning to the effect that he was cabling today instructions to De Stefano indicating that Italian Government accept that negotiations and agreements on Military Relief Credits are to be kept independent of Peace Treaty discussions. They expressed the hope that the Canadian Government will find their way to meeting the Italian request for partial or total release of Italian assets. BELGO/CANADIAN NEGOTIATIONS ON MILITARY RELIEF CREDITS

Jacqmin advised yesterday that since there was to be no write down of claim, his Government would prefer, for internal political reasons, that Canadian Government simply bill the Belgian Government through the Belgian Ambassador in Ottawa for amount of adjusted claim agreed upon during discussions with Sinclair and Read. They would prefer making an immediate lump sum payment in dollars, or if Canadian Government desire partly in francs.

2. Sinclair, in agreeing to this proposal, emphasized mutual advantage to both countries of this type of settlement.

3. The Belgian Government wishes to settle this account immediately. We told Jacqmin we would ask Ottawa to arrange for an early communication to Belgian [9] Vittorio Zoppi, secrétaire-général, ministère des Affaires étrangères de l'Italie.

Vittorio Zoppi, Secretary-General, Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Italy.

Ambassador in Ottawa requesting settlement of account. We suggest payment of full amount of outstanding balance of the claim, U.S. dollars 7,047,860.47, be requested in dollars.

4. The following, initialled by Jacqmin, is basis on which outstanding balance of claim has been determined, Begins:

Settlement of Canadian Government Share of Military Civil Relief to Belgium

The initial amount of the Combined Civil Affairs Liquidating Agency (CCALA) summary of bills being U.S. dollars 156,449,251.50, the Canadian share of five percent amounts to U.S. dollars 7,822,462.58. This figure has been adjusted to U.S. dollars 7,106,085.52. Furthermore nine payments have been made representing a total value of U.S. dollars 58,225.05. The balance to be paid thus amounts to U.S. dollars 7,047,860.47. Ends.

5. The Belgians desire no publicity be given at present to this settlement and Sinclair would be grateful if this wish could be carefully observed.[10]

(3) At a meeting which took place at Luxembourg on January 23rd [sic] representatives of both Governments exposed their respective points of view. In conclusion, Luxembourg Government agreed to consider as an undisputed liability vis-à-vis the Government of Canada an amount of $365,000 United States.

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 25-50 [Ottawa], January 23, 1950

MILITARY RELIEF — SETTLEMENT OF CANADIAN CLAIMS AGAINST GREECE

Canadian policy regarding claims against European countries for military relief was set forth in P.C. 3065 of July 31, 1947.† A copy of that document is attached. In paragraph 5) (a) (iii) the Canadian claim against Greece is set at $612,352 (U.S. dollars).

2. On May 15, 1947, the Government of Greece was advised of the total military relief bill from the United States, United Kingdom and Canada, and of the shares of the three countries, including the Canadian share mentioned above. The bill was presented in terms of U.S. dollars, but the actual forms of settlement were to be agreed by each of the three countries with Greece.

3. The United Kingdom and the United States have both waived their claims against Greece. Action by the United States was part of a general settlement of post-war claims.

4. After careful consideration, it was decided that Canada should not waive her claim outright in the case of Greece (or Italy). It was felt that Canada's financial contribution to post-war European recovery could better be made in other ways. The United States and United Kingdom Governments were, however, informed on January 13, 1947, that while we were not prepared to waive our claim against Greece we would nevertheless only seek a "nominal" settlement in view of the [11] Le ministère des Affaires extérieures en a approuvé les termes le 22 janvier 1950. L'accord avec la Belgique et celui avec le Luxembourg n'ont pas été publiés dans le Recueil des traités.

Terms approved by the Department of External Affairs, January 22, 1950. The agreement with Belgium and the agreement with Luxembourg were not published in the Treaty Series.

serious economic difficulties of that country. On September 23, 1947, the Government of Greece was informed of the intention of the Government of Canada to request no more than a "nominal" settlement. It was, however, indicated that at some later date we would wish to discuss this claim.

5. The Department of Finance and External Affairs subsequently agreed that we should seek to acquire as soon as possible some real property, and improvements on it, in partial settlement. Our Ambassador in Athens was instructed on July 14, 1948, to make a formal approach to the Greek Government to enquire whether they would agree to arrange for the transfer of premises for use as a residence and/or Chancery for our Mission and to provide the funds required for repairs, decoration, alterations and for the purchase of furnishings insofar as these costs could be met within Greece. The possibility was also mentioned of the provision of "blocked" drachmae for payment of the annual maintenance expenses of our Mission over a specified number of years.

6. Our Ambassador has from time to time asked for a settlement along these lines. The Greeks have accepted the principle that they should arrange for the transfer of premises, but they appear unwilling to go beyond that. One building suitable as an embassy might be valued at $150,000 to $200,000, i.e. 25% to 30% of our total claim. In the case of Italy Cabinet recently decided that we should not ask for more than about 10% of our claim; however our total claim against Italy is for more than $28,000,000.

7. In view of these considerations, I recommend:

(a) that the negotiations which are now under way with the Government of Greece for the settlement of Canada's claim for military relief be continued along the same lines as heretofore;

(b) that we be prepared to accept in full settlement some real property, suitable to the needs of our mission in Greece;

(c) that, if a further request seems reasonable in the light of the value of the property accepted and of all the other circumstances, the Greek Government be requested to provide funds for repairs, decoration, alterations and furnishings, in so far as these costs can be met within Greece.[12]

DESPATCH 48 Brussels, January 31, 1950

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your telegram No. 10 of January 27† relating to the settlement of the Luxembourg debt to Canada on Military Civil Program account in which you advised that the settlement tentatively agreed upon, as a result of the negotiations which Mr. James Sinclair, M.P., Mr. C.L. Read and myself had in Luxembourg with the representatives of the Luxembourg Government and which were outlined in our telegram No. 20 of January 20, 1950, are acceptable to the Department of Finance. The Luxembourg Minister of Finance, Mr. Dupong,[13] has been told informally of your acceptance.

2. In paragraph 2 of your telegram No. 10† you indicated that you would prefer to have all military relief settlements confirmed by an exchange of notes in Ottawa. There is no need for an exchange of formal notes, in fact the Belgians wish to avoid such an exchange. Luxembourg would have no objection however and would be quite happy if it took place in Ottawa.

3. As regards the Belgians, there is no doubt that they had hoped for better terms. I believe that Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Read feel, as I do, that if we had anyone but Colonel Jacqmin to deal with, the negotiations in Brussels would have been very much more difficult and might have spun out indefinitely.

4. I am further convinced that Colonel Jacqmin was able to persuade his Ministry to agree to our terms very largely because of the presence in Brussels of the Parliamentary Assistant to the Canadian Minister of Finance. I have reason to believe that Jacqmin was able to use this fact to make his people realize that Canada attached serious importance to the prompt payment of this debt and that the affair in hand was not simply a matter of getting a fair share of another trans-Atlantic "handout".

5. You will perhaps have sensed something of the foregoing from the contrast between our telegram No. 14 of January 17 and our telegram No. 16 of January 19. The former gave the results of the first stage of the negotiations with Colonel Jacqmin. When it was sent we believed that all that remained was to receive your acceptance and then to have the agreement quoted in the telegram initialled here. The next morning, however, Colonel Jacqmin telephoned to ask if he could see us again at once. When he came to the Embassy it was clear that he had been instructed to reopen the whole discussion and to obtain a reduction of something like 20 percent. He carried out these fresh instructions with great skill and plausibility, but with obvious personal realization that the supporting arguments which he was forced to use were not very relevant. We naturally reacted strongly, and after an hour or so he promised to go back to his Ministry and to make it clear that Canada, having agreed to reasonable and properly supported accounting adjustments, expected the resulting amount to be settled promptly, in full, without further haggling. Late in the day he returned to tell us that his people had agreed and he put forward the even more acceptable proposals as set out in my telegram No. [16] of January [19].

6. As indicated in our telegram No. 16 of January 19 and as Mr. Sinclair has explained, I understand, in a personal letter† to Mr. Abbott, the Belgians having met our terms are extremely anxious to have payment effected with a complete absence of publicity and with the use of as little formal paper as possible. I believe that what they would like to receive is a few lines from the Department of External Affairs to the Belgian Embassy in Ottawa enclosing a bill from the Department of Finance for the sum of U.S. $7,047,860.47 in settlement of the Canadian share of the Belgian debt arising from supplies furnished under the Allied Military Civil Program. The whole settlement should be kept on an administrative level, with no reference whatever to "negotiations".

7. Since the Belgians have agreed to payment in full in U.S. dollars, with no payments in francs to the account in Brussels of the Government of Canada, we shall, I assume, revert in so far as the Embassy expenses are concerned to the system in force prior to May 1949.

I have, etc.

DESPATCH 97 Paris, February 3, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 27 of January 9th† and my telegram No. 64 of February 2nd† concerning the discussions held in Paris from January 30 to February 1st with the French authorities on the subject of our Military Relief claim against France.

2. The French Delegation consisted of three officials from the Ministry of Finance led by Mr. Clermont-Tonnerre, Assistant Director of External Finance in that Ministry, and a representative of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. On the Canadian side, in addition to Mr. James Sinclair, M.P. and Mr. C.L. Read of the Department of Finance, Mr. [George P.] Kidd and Mr. [H.M.] Robertson of the Embassy attended the talks.

3. The effective work of these discussions was completed in two short meetings. From the outset, we explained that we wished at the present time to conclude an interim settlement whereby the Canadian Government might receive some payments in francs to cover various Canadian Government expenses in this country. In support of this position, it was pointed out that we felt it was undesirable to negotiate a final settlement at this juncture since the claim of the Canadian Government was small in magnitude in comparison to the claim of the United Kingdom Government and that we considered it would be to the mutual benefit of all concerned to defer settlement until the larger claim had been negotiated. While the French were quite prepared to proceed with the discussions on this basis, they were interested in receiving some idea of the approximate figure of our total claim in order to be able to justify interim payments. The figure given to the French for this purpose was that of approximately $13,500,000 (U.S.). The French on their part felt that it would be helpful also if they gave us some indication of the figures they had in mind in relation to all the Military Relief claims. They stated that adjustments had been made during their talks with the United States during which the total C.C.A.L.A. figure of approximately $247,000,000 (U.S.) was adjusted to approximately $175,000,000 (U.S.). The reasons mentioned for these adjustments were discrepancies in the bills for P.O.L. and the fact that a substantial amount of the supplies billed under Military Relief were actually furnished under Lease-Lend. In commenting on this we explained that while we were quite prepared to consider any fair adjustment in our figure when the time came to negotiate a final settlement, we were not in a position to discuss this point at the present meeting. The subject was therefore not discussed further and left on the basis of this exchange of views.

4. We then proceeded to the main core of the business at hand, that of obtaining some interim payments in French francs from the French Government. The French delegates were quite agreeable to our proposals for interim payments and raised no objection to the uses for which it was proposed that these francs might be put by the Canadian Government, i.e.

(a) For the current expenditures of the Canadian Government in France;

(b) For the purchase of an Embassy and residences in France;

(c) For the purchase of furniture and furnishings for Canadian Missions throughout the world;

(d) For any cultural and educational programme which the Canadian Government might embark upon at a later date in this country.

In addition, they indicated their agreement in principle to our proposal that French francs might be used for the purchase of a property in Greece for the Canadian Government, with the proviso however that the Greek authorities would have no objection to such a proposal. While discussing these payments on account, the French authorities pointed out that they would like to have some approximate figure of our needs in francs on which to base such interim payments, and it was agreed that the figure of $4,000,000 (U.S.) in French francs might be taken as indicative of the total requirements of the Canadian Government over the next two years for the purposes described above.

5. At the final meeting a draft of a note† was prepared, a copy of which is attached to this despatch. It is proposed that this note, if agreeable to the Canadian authorities, should be sent by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs to the Embassy, and that it, together with the Embassy's reply, should constitute an interim agreement on our Military Relief claim against France pending a final settlement.

6. You will observe that the draft note suggests that postponement of a final settlement was made in consideration of the wishes of the Canadian Government. This we understand is rather important to the French politically in order to justify these payments on account against a debt of an unfixed amount. As mentioned previously, we did suggest that final settlement should be deferred until such time as the United Kingdom had completed their negotiations with France.

7. I should be grateful to receive your comments on the proposed French note and any suggestions as to our reply, at your earliest convenience, in order that we may complete the necessary formalities with the French authorities.[14]

8. A copy of this despatch is being sent to Canada House.

I have, etc.

(b) In midst of electoral campaigning now well under way there is considerable risk that one or more parties will use your discussions with Greek authorities for partisan purposes. Foreign Minister is firmly of the opinion that this possibility is not to be excluded. In view of frequent Greek Government leakages there is no guarantee whatever that information on your discussions with Greek authorities would not find its way into the press. DESPATCH 48 Belgrade, February 7, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

SETTLEMENT OF MILITARY RELIEF — CANADIAN CLAIM AGAINST YUGOSLAVIA

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 7 of January 9, 1950,† on the above subject.

2. On Saturday, February 4, 1950, Mr. James Sinclair, Mr. Clarence L. Read and myself met with representatives of the Yugoslav Government and concluded an understanding with regard to the above claims. The text of the agreed draft Note† is attached for your approval. It was agreed that the Legation would present the Note to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs and in their Note of reply the text of our Note would be included, with a statement to the effect that the exchange of Notes would constitute an agreement.

3. You will note in paragraph 2 of the draft Note it is proposed that the Canadian Government accept in full settlement of the claim Yugoslav dinars to the equivalent of U.S. $150,000, to be deposited in the National Bank of Yugoslavia in 4 equal annual instalments commencing April 1, 1950. When the proposed terms of settlement were discussed in Ottawa before Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Read left, it was suggested that payments in dinars should be made by Yugoslavia as and when requested by the Canadian Government. During the course of the negotiations here the Yugoslav representatives expressed concern over the losses in receipts of foreign exchange if the proposed dinar account was used to meet current operating expenses of this Mission. They pointed out that under the interpretation applicable to the agreement of July 19, 1948, with the Government of the United States, the dinar payments made to the Government of the United States are used only for the purchase of real property in Yugoslavia and not for current operating expenses. They felt that the use by Canada of dinars for purposes otherwise financed with foreign exchange was a considerable concession on their part in comparison with their agreement with the United States. In consideration of this it was felt that we might agree to spread the use of the dinars over a period of 4 years rather than make any further reductions in the amount of the total payment.

4. With reference to paragraph 5 of the draft Note, the Yugoslav representatives insisted on writing in such a clause. They said they knew of no outstanding claims between the two Governments but wished to have the fact on record as was done under the agreements with both the United States and the United Kingdom. It was made clear that while we saw no objection in principle to such a clause, if no debts or claims are outstanding, we could only write in the clause tentatively, subject to consideration and approval in Ottawa.

5. The Yugoslav authorities are anxious to close the matter as soon as possible and therefore it would be appreciated if you would cable your approval of the text of the draft Note.[15]

6. The attached draft Note and this despatch were prepared by Mr. Read and revised by Mr. Sinclair and myself.

MILITARY RELIEF

Following for Pearson and Abbott from Désy and Sinclair, Begins: Negotiations here extremely difficult. Italians maintain word: "nominal" in Pearson's letter was supported in subsequent conversations with External Affairs, Ottawa, as meaning only a building for Embassy. Désy insisted most strongly that his instructions from Ottawa at the time of these conversations were that nominal payment was to include building, repairs, alterations, etc., and scholarships, and gave exact dates when he summarized Canada's position to Count Sforza as far back as March, 1948. We have proposed settlement of three million on basis of 600,000 for building, 400,000 for two year Government operational expense in Italy, 2,000,000 for scholarships and cultural purposes. This proposal now incompatible with Italian Cabinet, but see no hope of acceptance as Italians insist no mention has been made to them of latter items.

Sinclair proceeding to Athens and returning for Italian reply February 17th. Our feeling is we should not accept less than one and half million, the cut to be made on scholarships. C.D. Howe suggests we take whatever we can get, but we would not recommend any settlement less than a million. SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following for Désy and Sinclair. Your telegram No. 21 concerning military relief.

1. Yesterday Cabinet considered the Italian account and agreed that you should press strongly for settlement of not less than one and one-half million dollars. This decision is in accordance with the view expressed in last paragraph of your telegram No. 21.

2. If settlement at this minimum figure proves impossible Government would agree reluctantly to a settlement at one million dollars but that figure represents absolute minimum.

3. Concerning suggestion in your telegram No. 22 of February 13† we can give no assurances concerning release of Italian surplus assets except that we are proceeding as quickly as possible. As you know we have consistently maintained that the military relief settlement is distinct and separate from the problem of Italian assets held by the custodian and we think that it would be undesirable to say anything at this time which might indicate we were linking the two subjects. Le ministre au Danemark au secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Minister in Denmark
to Secretary of State for External Affairs

DESPATCH 54 Copenhagen, February 22, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 5 of January 9, 1950† informing me that Mr. James Sinclair, Parliamentary Assistant to the Minister of Finance, and Mr. C.L. Read of the Department of Finance, would be visiting Denmark among other countries in Europe to take part in negotiations for the settlement of claims of the Canadian Military Relief grants to Denmark.

2. Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Read arrived in Copenhagen by air on the afternoon of Sunday, February 19, 1950 and a conference was held between them, myself and officials of the Danish Ministries for Foreign Affairs, Finance and Commerce at Christiansborg at 11:30 a.m. on the morning of Monday, February 21, 1950. The conference was of brief duration as there was no difficulty in reaching general agreement on the principles to be adopted in the settlement. By arrangement with the Ministry for Foreign Affairs I have now received a draft Note† setting forth the settlement reached, two copies of which I am transmitting for your consideration and approval. It has already been seen and approved by Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Read. If it is entirely satisfactory we will advise the Ministry for Foreign Affairs to this effect on receipt of word from you and the settlement can then be concluded by a formal exchange of notes.

3. The settlement is based on the bills submitted through CCALA with the corrections and adjustments requested by the Danish Government in their Note of August 3, 1949 which was transmitted to you with my despatch No. 155 of August 8, 1949. The reductions made are proportionate to those agreed upon by the United Kingdom authorities who advised Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Read when they were in London that the War Office and Treasury officials had accepted the Danish proposals in respect of Beehive yarn and coal deliveries, the two outstanding items which had been under discussion.

4. The Danish representatives emphasized from the start that they considered the indebtedness due Canada on military relief in terms of Danish kroner calculated on the bills submitted by CCALA at pre-devaluation rates of exchange. You will recall that the debt was so expressed in their Note of August 3, 1949, which, as I mentioned above, went forward to you with my despatch No. 155 of August 8. Our position on this, however, was clearly stated and we finally, in effect, arrived at the compromise discussed with Mr. Sinclair and Mr. Read before they left Ottawa; i.e., payment of 2 million kroner converted at pre-devaluation rates, and the balance in United States dollars.

5. As it was emphasized by the Ministry for Foreign Affairs that it would be a matter of some embarrassment to them to have the formal agreement expressed in terms of U.S. dollars, the draft note accordingly expresses the debt in terms of kroner. This is not the form of agreement we would have preferred, but since the payments are identical to those proposed by the Canadian Government we were not disposed to be adamant on this point and acceded to the Danish wishes. You will also observe that the draft note enumerates the four purposes for which the Canadian Government's kroner account with the National Bank of Denmark may be used. Of these four, agreement in principle had already been reached on three in previous correspondence with the Ministry for Foreign Affairs and we experienced no difficulty in gaining a concession on the fourth point, i.e., conversion of a portion of the funds into other soft currencies, by mutual agreement in the future.

6. I feel that we can regard this settlement with satisfaction and I look forward to receiving your telegraphed approval in order that the formal exchange of notes finally settling the matter may take place at as early a date as possible.[16]

I have, etc.

DESPATCH 57 Oslo, February 28, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir,

With reference to your airmail despatch No. 6 of January 9th† concerning military relief settlements — Canadian claim against Norway, I have the honour to report upon the recent negotiations undertaken for the purpose of settling the Canadian claim of $1,703,000 U.S. for military relief supplies sent to Norway in 1945.

2. Mr. James Sinclair and Mr. C.L. Read, the Canadian representatives specially appointed to negotiate settlement of Canadian claims against Norway and other European countries, arrived in Oslo from Copenhagen at 4:10 P.M., February 22nd, and left for London at 11:15 A.M., February 25th. In the two full days at their disposal three meetings with the Norwegian officials, the minutes† of which are enclosed, were held. The chief negotiator on the Norwegian side was Mr. Christian Brinch, Ekspedisjonsjef, Department of Commerce. It is a matter of regret both to myself and to the Canadian representatives that it did not prove possible to reach an agreement at these discussions. As matters were left after the final meeting the Norwegian Government will present a written statement of its case, probably through the Norwegian Legation in Ottawa. Mr. Sinclair, for his part, has undertaken to inform the Cabinet of the two alternative Norwegian offers and to present an answer, through the Canadian Legation in Oslo, by March 20th.

3. The alternative settlements offered by Norway were as follows:

(a) Immediate settlement of the total claim for $850,000 U.S.;

(b) A settlement of 8,000,000 kroner to be utilized for local Canadian expenses in Norway, educational and cultural exchanges and possible conversion into other soft currencies, all in accordance with a specific plan to be drawn up as part of the agreement.

4. The final offer made by the Canadian negotiators was a straight 25% reduction of the total claim (that is to $1,277,250), $200,000 to be paid in U.S. funds and the remainder in kroner, conversion into other soft currencies being left open to mutual agreement.

5. The Norwegian officials approached the discussions very cautiously and devoted a good deal of effort to establishing, first, that the Norwegian Government had, for various reasons, never accepted as valid the total for which Norway had been billed; second, that Norway could claim sweeping consideration on the basis of war damages and her weak international payments position; and third, that devaluation had radically altered the picture and established a claim to yet further consideration.

6. The big surprise in the negotiations was the offer of a quick settlement entirely in U.S. dollars. Enquiries off the record established the fact that these were free dollars which would be available only up to March 31st. It seems possible that they are earnings from Norwegian ships, though there was no satisfactory explanation offered as to why the period of their availability should be so short. The Norwegians were very wedded to this proposal, which they obviously hoped, and perhaps expected, that the Canadians would quickly accept.

7. By contrast there was a marked reluctance to discuss proposals for a kroner settlement, a reluctance which was underlined by their failing, or refusing, to bridge the relatively small gap between their final kroner offer and our own. Endless difficulties were raised about the details of settlement in kroner, but there were two considerations which appeared to bulk particularly large. The first objection seemed to be the very considerable increase in the claim, as expressed in kroner, which arises from devaluation; the second was an obvious dislike of a settlement which would involve long lasting obligations of a kind difficult to pin down at once by a hard-and-fast agreement.

8. My impression is that the Norwegians hoped that, by offering United States dollars, they would be able to cut their indebtedness to about half the total amount claimed by Canada. To say that I am disappointed with the Norwegian attitude would be an understatement and I am not inclined to recommend that Canada accept $850,000 (U.S.) as a settlement of the claim. The more especially because this course would deprive us here of any reasonable volume of kroner on which to draw in the event that we should find suitable property for a Legation residence and chancery, for the furnishing thereof and for the running expenses of the mission.

9. In closing, I would like to pay a tribute to the tact and patience shown by Messrs. Sinclair and Read throughout the negotiations.

I have, etc.

DESPATCH 139 Rome, March 2, 1950

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to our telegram No. 32 of February 24† reporting in outline the settlement reached with the Italian government on the question of military relief payments.

2. I had hoped to be able before this to have sent you the draft Exchange of Notes and memorandum, but unfortunately, in spite of everything that we have been able to do, the final drafts have not as yet been approved by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. I now feel however that because of these repeated delays it is perhaps advisable to send you the draft Exchange of Notes and memorandum as agreed on during our conversations but which have yet to be finally accepted by the Ministry. These drafts are enclosed herewith, but I must emphasize that they are not the final drafts.

3. I do not anticipate that when the final drafts are received there will be any important changes, but I have numbered the various paragraphs so that if there are any changes these can be reported to you by cable by referring to the numbered paragraphs.

4. Actually the delay has been caused by the necessity of obtaining the agreement from the Ministry of Foreign Trade to the final sentence in paragraph 2 of our draft note to the Minister of Foreign Affairs.

5. When it became clear that in spite of the agreed decision not to link the military relief payments with war assets payments, the Italian government had no intention whatsoever of paying a single cent on the military relief claims until agreement had been announced on the release of assets, we insisted on inserting this clause. As a matter of fact this reference to the impossibility of presenting the agreement to parliament until the announcement of an agreement on war assets was not actually brought up during the negotiations, but was included in the memorandum presented to us after Mr. Sinclair had left. This I consider to be a most unethical procedure on behalf of the Italian government, and it was for this reason that in my cable under reference I recommended that no assets should be released in advance of full settlement of war damage claims.

6. You may perhaps wonder why it was not possible to reach an agreement for immediate payment of at least the eight hundred thousand Canadian dollars, but on this point the Italians simply refused to enter into any sort of discussion on the grounds that there was no point in discussing something which they knew parliament would not accept under any circumstances whatsoever, until they could announce an agreement on the release of war assets.

7. It is important to note of course that in the memorandum the Italians agree that as soon as an official announcement of the conclusion of an agreement on Italian assets can be made, the military relief agreement will be submitted to parliament without delay. Thus, whatever final arrangement is made about war assets the implementation of the military relief agreement will not be dependent on when war assets are released, but will only be dependent on the announcement that an agreement has been reached between the two governments for the release of Italian assets.

8. I am very glad that Mr. Sinclair was more successful in the other countries than in Italy, but in fact our case was undoubtedly very weak, because of the previous assurances to the Italian government that we would accept a nominal payment.

I have, etc.

Draft Note from Ambassador in Italy to Minister of Foreign Affairs of Italy

Rome, [n.d.]

Sir,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter of today's date, as quoted below:

1. "Following the conversations held in Rome with Mr. James Sinclair concerning the question of civilian relief, and the agreements concluded with him, I have the honour to inform you that the Italian government, in token of gratitude for the help given by Canada to Italian civilians during the war, has decided to present the Canadian government with a property to be used as the seat of the Canadian Embassy in Rome.

2. "To this end, and so that the Canadian government may proceed with the buying, building and furnishing of this property, the Italian government will place at the disposal of the Canadian government a sum in Italian lire equivalent to eight hundred thousand Canadian dollars calculated at the official rate of exchange used in commercial transactions on the day of payment, as soon as the Italian parliament will have approved such settlement. Pending the final payment of the aforementioned sum, should the Canadian government wish to purchase a property and its furnishings the Italian government will make the final payment in Canadian dollars for the sum which the Canadian government has imported into Italy for the purchase and furnishing of the property.

3. "At the same time the Italian government undertakes to conclude as soon as possible with the Canadian government a cultural agreement providing for the establishment of a foundation designed to facilitate intellectual exchanges between Canada and Italy, and to which the Italian government will assign in Italian government bonds bearing 5% interest a sum equivalent to five hundred thousand Canadian dollars at the rate of exchange used in commercial transactions on the day of payment. This amount will constitute a part of the endowment of this foundation and the yield will be used for the educational purposes to be determined according to the statute of the foundation. It is understood that whatever terms may be incorporated in this statute by the Cultural Convention, the President of the foundation will be the Canadian Ambassador in Rome."

4. The Canadian government, in taking note of this communication, instructs me to inform the Italian government that the payments mentioned in the Italian note constitute the nominal payment referred to in the previous correspondence and conversations between our two governments, and that it considers as closed all questions concerning the relief supplied by Canada to Italian civilians during the war.

Accept, etc.

2. For technical reasons the Italians have asked if we would not remove the last sentence of the second paragraph of the draft note to us beginning, "Pending the final payment of the aforementioned sum," and incorporate this agreement in an exchange of informal notes with the Minister of Foreign Trade.

3. As there appears to be no objection to this course, and in order to expedite settlement, I have agreed to this and despatched a note to the Minister of Foreign Trade incorporating the sense of that sentence. It is hoped that we shall receive a reply from the Minister of Foreign Trade within a day or so, and once this is received it is hoped that there will be no further delay in the acceptance by the Ministry of Foreign Affairs.

Italian officials were afraid that inclusion of the undertaking in the exchange of notes would complicate the issue and force the Italian Government to enter into discussions with the various Departments of Treasury and of the Foreign Trade Ministry for securing reimbursement in Canadian currency should there not be previous understanding between us and Trade Minister on subject. We are satisfied that exchange of letters with Lombardo protects fully our position as well as theirs. Ends.

MILITARY RELIEF — SETTLEMENT WITH GREECE

We would be grateful if you would re-open this matter with the Greek authorities.

2. If the Greek authorities are willing to make a settlement we would greatly prefer to receive a property. As the amount involved in the settlement will be relatively small, and as the Government situation in Greece may remain unstable, it seems preferable to make one clear-cut settlement rather than become involved in matters such as scholarships or Greek antiquities which might require prolonged negotiations and extensive administrative arrangements.

3. You will by now have received Hansard for June 29th. In the prepared part of his statement (page 4380, column 2) Mr. Sinclair said: "If we get no other payment out of Greece than gratitude I think Canada will have been well repaid". This certainly would appear to indicate that the Canadian Government was not intending to press the Greek Government strongly for a settlement; on the other hand it also indicates quite clearly that the Canadian Government still anticipates the possibility of receiving from Greece something in addition to gratitude.

4. At a later point in the debate Mr. Sinclair was discussing the Greek situation with Mr. Fleming[20] and at that point (page 4383, column 2) he is reported as saying: "I spoke a little loosely when I said our aim was to get as much as we could. That was certainly true of those countries which could afford to pay but it was never thought by the Government at all that anything should be asked for from Greece". It is not easy to place an exact interpretation on the last sentence and it may have been misreported. It is clearly not correct to say that "It was never thought by the Government ... that anything should be asked for from Greece".

5. In discussing your despatch with the Department of Finance the question of the "defaulted credit" extended to Greece after the First World War has come up again. As I think you know, the Canadian Government is still carrying on its books as an active asset a debt of $6,525,000 (principal) in the case of Greece along with a debt in the same category owed by Roumania. It is, however, agreed here that it would be inadvisable, both from a financial and political point of view, to raise now the issue of the old debt. It should be left open for possible future consideration. Present discussions with the Greek authorities should be limited to the question of settlement of the military relief claim.

Projet d'une Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures à l'ambassadeur de la France

Draft Note from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Ambassador of France

[Ottawa], October 20, 1950

By an exchange of letters dated March 29 and March 30, 1950, between your Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Canadian Ambassador in France, an interim arrangement pending final settlement of Canada's claim in respect of military relief was agreed upon. This claim of the Government of Canada against the Government of France in the amount of U.S. $13,455,414.98 is for reimbursement in respect of Canada's share of the value of supplies distributed to the civilian population of Metropolitan France and to the French Zones of Germany and Austria by the combined military authorities under the Supreme Allied Command.

2. By your Note No. 18, dated February 3, 1950, and my reply, Note No. 38, dated April 8, 1950, the lump sum of $1,150,000 was agreed upon as the amount of compensation owing by the Government of Canada to the Government of France in respect of French vessels requisitioned by Canada during the war, the conditions and method of payment of this amount to be a matter for discussion between our two governments. This claim is made by your Government on behalf of the owners of vessels concerned.

3. During recent discussions in Paris between representatives of our two governments it was agreed that full and final settlement of these two claims arising from the war should be made under one agreement in the manner and terms set forth in the following paragraphs.

4. The Government of France agrees that the amount of the compensation referred to in paragraph 2 above due to the Government of France in respect of vessels requisitioned during the war shall be offset against the claim of the Government of Canada, referred to in paragraph 1 above, and agrees that this shall constitute full and final settlement of the claim of the Government of France referred to in paragraph 2 above and the Government of France indemnifies the Government of Canada against any further claims by it or its nationals in respect of French vessels requisitioned by the Government of Canada during the last world war.

5. The Government of Canada, in view of the above settlement and of representations concerning adjustments in the accounts of military relief supplies and in consideration of the serious long-term effects of the war on the economy of France, agrees to accept an amount of U.S. [$7,513,610] in French francs in full and final settlement of the claim referred to in paragraph 1 above.

6. The Government of France agrees to deposit from time to time as requested to the credit of the Government of Canada in special accounts established for this purpose, French francs not exceeding the equivalent in value of U.S. [$7,513,610], including payments equivalent to U.S. $500,000 already made on account under the arrangement referred to in paragraph 1 above. French francs so transferred to the account of the Government of Canada will be credited under this settlement in terms of U.S. dollars at the rate of exchange established in accordance with the rules and regulations of the International Monetary Fund or, in the absence of such a rate, at the rate of exchange used by the Government of France in its official transactions on the date each such deposit is made.

7. Any deposits into the special accounts may be used by the Government of Canada:

(a) to meet any of its current expenditures in France;

(b) to purchase real estate for Canadian diplomatic and consular establishments in France;

(c) to purchase in France furniture and furnishings for Canadian diplomatic and consular establishments both in France and in other countries;

(d) to meet the costs of educational and cultural programmes which the Canadian Government may undertake in France;

(e) to provide for any other expenditures which might later be agreed upon between our two governments.

The Canadian Government considers that deposits into the special accounts at the rate of the equivalent of U.S. $500,000 every six months will be sufficient to meet its requirements under items (a), (b) and (c) above. The requirements of the Government of Canada to meet the costs of educational and cultural programmes in France will be a subject for discussion between our two governments when inauguration of such programmes is being considered.

8. If the present note correctly sets out the understanding reached between the representatives of our two governments in regard to the foregoing, I have the honour to suggest that this note and your reply be regarded as constituting an agreement between our two governments.[21]

DESPATCH 434 Athens, November 21, 1950

MILITARY RELIEF SETTLEMENT WITH GREECE

Owing to the changes of government and my absence from Athens to attend the I.R.O. meetings in Geneva, I did not have the opportunity of taking up this matter with the Prime Minister [Sophocles Venizelos] (who is also Minister of Foreign Affairs) until today.

2. As you will remember, the question of settlement was previously discussed with Mr. [Constantine] Tsaldaris (then Foreign Minister) by my predecessor, [Major] General [Léo R.] LaFlèche. Since the receipt of your despatch under reference, Mr. Tsaldaris and his party have fallen into disfavour and all Populist members have been excluded from government office. It was necessary, therefore, to make a fresh start and for this purpose I called on Mr. Venizelos today.

3. As Mr. Venizelos appeared to have little or no knowledge of the previous discussions, I felt obliged to explain the difficulties of acquiring the present residence at 15 Vassilissis Sophias and I said that we would not agree to pay the owner

[21] Voir Canada, Recueil des traités, 1951, N° 17./See Canada, Treaty Series, 1951, No. 17.

U.S. dollars and were consequently looking for a new property (land with or without buildings) on which to establish a chancery and residence. Mr. Venizelos replied that it would be quite out of the question for the Greek Government to pay the purchase price in U.S. funds but that the Government owned a considerable amount of land in Athens and I could rely on his support and assistance if the Canadian Government was willing to accept a settlement by a transfer of land. He asked also if I preferred Athens or Psychico. I told Mr. Venizelos that I believed you would be willing to accept land in settlement and that my personal preference was for land in Athens rather than in Psychico. Mr. Venizelos then undertook to obtain from the Department of Finance a list of the government-owned properties in Athens and to let me have this within a few days. As soon as I have inspected these properties I shall make another report on this matter.

4. Mr. Venizelos' reception of me and of this proposal was both cordial and sympathetic. I have some hopes of arranging a satisfactory settlement if suitable land is available and if Mr. Venizelos remains in power for somewhat longer than the recently established average life of a Greek government.

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au sous-ministre des Finances

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Deputy Minister of Finance

Ottawa, November 8, 1950

Attention: Mr. John J. Deutsch

I refer to your letter of October 27 in which you requested our views on a draft note to the French Ambassador concerning the settlement of the Canadian Military Relief Claim against France.

You particularly directed our attention to paragraph 7 of the note which deals with the uses to which the money received may be put, and the rate of withdrawal.

With respect to the latter, the rate proposed of $500,000 every six months appears satisfactory. However it might be pointed out that if the $500,000 received last May 11 under the Interim Agreement is considered the first payment when this exchange of notes takes place and we have to wait for another six months before receiving a further payment of $500,000, we will be obliged to purchase francs with Canadian Dollars to pay for our expenditures in France as we have already spent $360,000 of the $500,000. We suggest, therefore, that any payments made under the Interim Agreement be deducted from the total owed and that they be excluded as payments under the Agreement to be concluded.

The provisions for use by the Canadian Government of the money received meet our requirements. It is not possible at the present time to let you know just what funds will be needed to defray the cost of purchasing real estate, furniture, and furnishings for our diplomatic and consular establishments, but it is thought that we will not have to meet expenditures in excess of $500,000 every six months.

Clause 7 (c) as drafted would not permit the Canadian Government to buy furniture and furnishings for the Prime Minister's residence. We understand that consideration is being given to use some of this money to furnish one or two rooms at 24 Sussex Street. To provide for an expenditure of this nature, the clause might be amended to read "to purchase in France furniture and furnishings for Canadian Government establishments both in France and in other countries". The French should have no objection to this change if the purpose is explained.

It would be helpful if the scope of clause 7(b) were enlarged somewhat to include the cost of structural improvements, of remodelling and refurbishing the real estate.

There are a few alterations we would like to suggest in the text of the note. The first is that there should be no mention in paragraphs 1 and 2 to exchanges of notes and letters because the subject matter is included in the Text and it would be necessary to attach the notes and letters to this Agreement when it is published. These paragraphs would therefore read as follows:

(a) "In March 1950 an Interim Agreement was reached between your Minister of Foreign Affairs and the Canadian Ambassador in France pending final settlement of Canada's claim in respect of military relief ..."

(b) "Similarly in February and April 1950 it was agreed that the lump-sum of $1,150,000 should be the amount of compensation due by the Government of Canada to the Government of France ..."

A suitable salutation will no doubt be incorporated at the beginning of the note.

The wording of paragraph 4 is satisfactory in so far as the Agreement to offset the claims is concerned. The final statement in that paragraph to the effect that "the Government of France indemnifies the Government of Canada against any further claims by it or its nationals in respect of French vessels requisitioned by the Government of Canada during the last World War," may require revision. We understand that the indemnity clause is particularly directed to secure indemnity from the French Government for the proceeds of sale of the cargo of the S.S. Angelus, a subject being dealt with by the Prize Court at the present time. Since the Department of Justice conducts all Prize Court proceedings on behalf of the Crown, it should be given an opportunity to indicate the type of indemnity clause to which we would like the French to agree. The statement might ultimately be phrased as follows: "The Government of France agrees to indemnify the Government of Canada against any claims by it or its nationals or the owners of vessels registered in French ports and requisitioned by the Government of Canada during the last war, in respect of such French vessels or their cargoes."

The clause as it now stands is not promissory and does not mention cargoes nor does it provide for the possibility that the claimants in the case of the S.S. Angelus may not be French nationals.

The question of expenditures for our cultural and educational programmes in France will have to be held in abeyance for some little time. The policy for such programmes is under active consideration but it is not expected that we will be in a position to make concrete suggestions before the beginning of 1951.

Le président suppléant de la Commission de contrôle du change étranger à l'administrateur adjoint du Programme d'Administration de coopération économique des États-Unis

Alternate Chairman, Foreign Exchange Control Board, to Assistant Administrator of Program, Economic Cooperation Administration of United States

PERSONAL [Ottawa], January 3, 1950

Dear Bissell,

You may recall that when I visited you in Washington a couple of weeks ago you were good enough to hand me a copy of an ECA working paper dated December 9th on Intra-European Currency Transferability and Liberalization of Trade.† You did not specifically invite comments, but it has occurred to me that it might be a welcome change for someone connected with ECA to be on the receiving end for a few moments — even if only for disinterested comments. The views I express in this letter are, of course, personal, though I should say that I have discussed the paper with a few people here who are concerned with these matters and I think that they would agree with most of what I propose to say.

In the first place, I think that, viewed as a set of arrangements to facilitate trade within the group of countries covered, i.e. sterling area and Western European group of countries, the present proposals represent a considerable improvement over the arrangements embodied in the intra-European Payments Agreement. The improvement results mainly from the fact that in the set-up you are now proposing a sniff of the market is introduced through the untieing of drawing rights and through the provisions regarding quantitative trade restrictions. Of course, so far as the latter is concerned the proof of the pudding will be in the eating; and if, as I suspect, the basic reason for many of these quantitative restrictions is simply protection, rather than balance of payments difficulties, you are going to encounter great resistance to doing away with them even though ECA may be prepared to put quite a bit into the pot.

Another feature about the new proposals which is good is that the arrangements for creditors getting progressively smaller, and debtors paying progressively larger, proportions in the form of gold for their intra-area surpluses and deficits beyond a certain point do appear to provide appropriate national incentives, i.e. for surplus countries to sell to the Western Hemisphere and for deficit countries not to regard their imports derived from within the area as "free". What bothers me about this is — how does one translate these national incentives into individual incentives for the exporters and importers in the various countries. If this is to be done through the price mechanism it would seem to involve pretty continuously fluctuating exchange rates with the cross-parities disrespected. The opportunities this affords for all sorts of tricks and games make me shudder. Perhaps the price system isn't expected to do this job — does this mean then that it is done by export controls? To put the question concretely, when Belgian exports to the area have passed beyond the agreed credit margin plus the agreed structural surplus and Belgium is getting less than 100 per cent gold settlement for her exports to the area, there is a national incentive for Belgium to shift exports to the Western Hemisphere but how is she expected to create individual incentives for her exporters to look for markets in the U.S.A. and Canada?

I would like to refer now to some of the broader issues connected with these Western Europe cum sterling area payments arrangements. It seems to me that there are two ways of looking at these arrangements. One way is to regard them as a piece of machinery for facilitating intra-area trade. Another is to regard them as a part of the process of attaining the ultimate economic objectives of the European Recovery Program which I conceive to be that the dollar earnings of Western Europe shall be raised to a level which, when supplemented by a reasonable continued outflow of capital from the United States, permits Europe to balance her dollar accounts at a high level of transactions without the necessity of continued discrimination against dollar imports. Now this second objective is obviously much more important than the first — in fact there is no immediately apparent reason why intra-European trade should be especially encouraged, unless of course one despairs of ever reaching the second objective. At all events this does point to the necessity of making sure that the arrangements to facilitate intra-area trade are not of a character which will tend to reduce the dollar earnings of the countries concerned.

You are yourself, of course, well aware of this and the new elements which have been introduced into the plan reflect your concern — in particular, the multilateralization of drawing rights and the arrangements for the abolition of quantitative restrictions. But I think it important to recognize that, even with these safeguards, the plan does involve certain risks. One is it will add to the inflationary pressures in the countries concerned. I say add to the pressures, because it seems to me that the desire for defence and social security programs which are really beyond the economic capacity of these countries plus the fact that the area includes undeveloped countries where inflation tends to be endemic probably makes this whole Western Europe-sterling area constellation an inflationary area anyway, as compared with the United States and Canada. The provision now of guaranteed credit margins plus guaranteed cash for financing intra-area trade can, unless precautions are taken, help this part of the world to develop into a separate trading area, with costs and prices higher than in the dollar countries, and protected against the dollar countries by discriminatory import restrictions. One need only think of the way in which the operations of the sterling area (an area of multilateralism and free capital movements in many respects similar to that at which your proposal aims) has weakened the position of the United Kingdom in recent years and reduced its capacity to earn dollars to remind oneself that transferability of currency and free capital movements within a closed area provide no guarantees of desirable economic results. One would certainly not want to see this present scheme encourage the formation of separate economic blocs — even though the "soft currency" bloc is larger and more co-ordinated than it has been in the past.

Such a development would be defensible only if one despaired of the "soft currency" bloc ever earning enough dollars to pay (along with such capital outflows from the Western Hemisphere as take place after the ERP period) for a tolerable level of dollar imports without continuing discrimination. And I suppose that if one did despair, it might be either because one felt that the deficit countries were incapable of the internal adjustments required or because one felt that the United States would not pursue a tariff policy appropriate to her international position. I know that I am beating at an open door in suggesting to you that these are the really constructive approaches to the problem. But I say it anyway because these European currency schemes always give me the nervous feeling that they are preparations for failure of your long-term objectives rather than preparations for success.

The inflationary dangers in the proposed plan are, of course, largely a function of the amount of extra purchasing power put into the financing of intra-area trade. From this point of view, I would therefore like to see both the required credit margins and the amounts provided to cover "structural surpluses" kept down to a minimum, though I realize that bait is needed if trade is to be liberalized. For the rest, I think that some safeguard against the re-emergence of the problem of the high-price, low-price areas (which the recent devaluations has at least partly met) could be obtained by insisting on a pretty rapid demobilization of intra-area trade restrictions and a beginning at relaxation of the severe discriminations against dollar imports. The latter postulates dollar earnings which increase more rapidly than ERP assistance tapers off. With help from the American end by way of encouraging imports, through effective action on tariffs and customs administration, and with a willingness on the part of the deficit countries really to direct their policies, internal and external, at earning dollars, I should not have thought the thing impossible. At all events, if it really is impossible then the outlook for the eventual achievement of the objectives of the foreign economic policy of the U.S. (and Canada) is very bleak indeed.

I feel that I should apologize to you for the length of this letter. The most practical amend I can make is to tell you that, realizing how busy you are, I shall not expect a reply to it.

With warm regards, and with best wishes to you and your associates for the New Year, I am

Yours sincerely,

LOUIS RASMINSKY

TELEGRAM WA-89 Washington, January 13, 1950

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Following for Heeney from Wrong, Begins: In your letter of December 29th,[22] I was asked to take up informally with the Secretary of State the reasons why we are fearful of the possible consequences of United States pressure for European integration. I discussed your letter with Towers before meeting with Acheson and Franks last Friday. We agreed that, in view of the limited time we would have with Acheson and the important new problems which we hoped would be explored at our meeting, it would not be advisable to discuss in any detail our objections to the United States drive for European integration, or, specifically, our objections to the present proposals for a European clearing union. I did, however, mention that the Canadian authorities were concerned that the present ECA plans might lead to the creation of a closed trading block from which Canada as well as the United States would be increasingly excluded. There was, however, no detailed discussion of our objections to any of the integration plans.

2. Since the receipt of your letter and of the memorandum to the Tripartite Working Group in Ottawa dated January 6th,[23] we have had several conversations, at the working level, in the State Department, Treasury and the ECA. In addition, copies of Rasminsky's letter of January 3rd, to Bissell, are slowly working their way around ECA. This letter, I think, sets forth admirably from the economic point of view the important objections to and shortcomings of the clearing union proposals. There is not much doubt that the concern felt in Ottawa about the Bissell plan would be shared by most of the officials in the Treasury and by a few officials in ECA and the State Department. It is, however, difficult to know what we should do about these proposals and the vigour and manner in which we should make our objections known.

3. A good many officials here consider that the important turning point on this question came last summer when the United States, faced with the insistent British request to be released from the obligations of Article 9 of the Loan Agreement, accepted discrimination against its exports to the United Kingdom and to the OEEC countries and put its position on record in the form of a secret aide mémoire (see WA-2733, September 30th), commencing with the paragraph:

"The United States supports this initiative by the United Kingdom towards relaxing its trade restrictions to the extent permitted by balance-of-payments considerations, thus widening the area of increased trade competition and promoting greater efficiencies of production."

From the discussions which our officials and Ministers had during the September financial talks and from our earlier reports on the United States attitude toward relieving the United Kingdom of its obligations under Article 9, it is, I think, clear that the United States position was only arrived at after a great deal of deliberation. There is no doubt that there was and there will continue to be considerable misgivings in some quarters of the United States Government about this decision. Nevertheless, the United States decision was a conscious one, — one from which the United States cannot now easily retreat even if it wishes to do so.

4. In our judgment, the preponderance of United States Government opinion, with certain important minority views, is that the United States having accepted, temporarily, discrimination against itself on balance of payments grounds, should encourage the freest possible trade covering the widest possible area of the soft-currency countries until the conditions which would permit the restoration of non-discrimination exist again. There are, however, many difficult points for the United States to resolve. One of these, which is mentioned later, is the relationship of the International Monetary Fund to these proposals. The question of how wide this multilateral soft-currency trading area should be is one where there are fairly important differences of opinion. The ECA from top to bottom, with only very few exceptions, and the most influential sections of the State Department, including the important planning group, the European Affairs Office and the economic advisers to the European Office, are strong supporters of all reasonable measures leading towards European economic integration. They regard the European clearing union proposals as such a measure. The commercial policy officials and those who have been concerned with the I.T.O. and the G.A.T.T. are opposed to the doctrine of discrimination on a regional basis. Discrimination against the dollar area for balance of payments reasons is one thing. Regional discrimination, however, is something not allowed for by the G.A.T.T. and should not be allowed. The question of the relationship of G.A.T.T. and the clearing union proposals has not yet been worked out.

5. I understand that Vernon of the Commercial Policy Division has written to Willoughby about the possibility of an early meeting with Deutsch, in Ottawa, at which the State Department's "embryonic" plans for placing this whole question on the agenda for the fourth session of G.A.T.T. could be discussed.

6. Those who support the move towards integration, and specifically the European clearing union, do so for political as well as economic reasons. ECA would never have received the strong support they have from the planning group in the State Department and, we understand, from the Secretary himself if the State Department did not attach great importance to the European countries making progress towards some kind of economic union, however imperfect, with a view to eventual closer European political association. Those who have put the drive behind the integration proposals seem to have comparatively few doubts that they are right. They are persuaded that the best way to the eventual end of discrimination against the dollar area lies in the direction of eliminating the trade barriers between the individual soft currency countries.

7. It is apparent, from a conversation held with Glendinning[24] and Willis[25] yesterday, that the Treasury Department's views of the clearing union are divergent from the majority views encountered within the ECA and State Department.

8. It seems certain that a reconciliation of major differences must be accomplished through the National Advisory Council within the next two weeks if the United States representatives are to be able to meet European proposals with a composite United States policy.

9. In this respect one of the difficulties that the Treasury Department will probably have to accept is a procedural one inasmuch as Treasury Department clearance was apparently not obtained before the clearing union proposals were advanced to OEEC.

10. On the main issue the Treasury Department opinion encountered was not clearly developed but indicated only lukewarm acceptance of ECA's concept. Their chief concerns are:

(a) The relationship of the clearing union to the I.M.F.,

(b) The question of whether the clearing union proposal is in the interest of United States long-term multilateral policy, and

(c) The apprehension that the clearing union will rank as a little I.M.F. which will need United States support in the post-ECA era.

11. It is apparently recognized that the approaching ECA appropriation discussions in Congress, and the fact that European Governments could reasonably expect the ECA proposals have, in fact, been United States Government proposals, mitigate against taking a stand within the N.A.C. that, if successful, would result in considerable embarrassment to the United States and possible damage to future ECA programmes. Nevertheless, the impression gained was that misgivings about the substance of the proposal might be strong enough to cause such a stand to be taken, although a firm decision had not been reached about this point.

12. Both Glendinning and Willis welcomed an intimation that there were misgivings on the Canadian side, and they said that their difficulties were also related to the question of whether or not the clearing union proposals were a step towards low-cost production and non-discrimination.

13. It was mentioned to them that some discussions with Canadian representatives might be arranged. In their opinion, the weekly tripartite meetings would not be suitable for discussing this issue, because they feel that other European countries would have a legitimate grievance if consideration by the Tripartite Group became known. It was added that the United States position on the clearing union proposals was being decided at high policy levels, and that there would be little value in having any talks at the technical level at this time. In so far as Glendinning and Willis were concerned, the question of holding conversations was left in abeyance.

14. It was stated that Southard[26] would introduce a discussion within the I.M.F. in the near future about the relationship of the I.M.F. to the clearing union proposals.

15. Some of the views which have been expressed to us, particularly as they relate to sharp differences in Departmental positions, should be treated with complete reserve in discussion which we may have with other Departments in Washington or which you may have with Willoughby or others in Ottawa. It is important that we should not get in a position of showing State Department or ECA officials how much we know of the misgivings which Treasury officials have concerning the clearing union proposals.

16. It has been useful to have our criticism of the clearing union plan informally brought to the attention of United States officials. However, I think we must decide whether or not we wish to have our objections put forward definitely and 'on the record'. It would be desirable, if we intend to do this, to have, if possible, some alternative proposals to suggest. Although the clearing union working group in Paris has not yet agreed on any specific text, no one seems to doubt that the OEEC will in the near future agree on a plan which will be broadly similar to the Bissell proposals. The Belgians wish to inject much more gold into the operation of the plan; the British take the opposite view — they want a minimum of gold involved. These points, however, are comparatively questions of detail. The plan with all its shortcomings and questions which give us concern does seem to have enough support in Europe and in the most powerful agencies of the United States Government to ensure its coming into operation in a few months' time. Therefore, without wishing to dissent from any of the criticisms expressed in your letter, I recommend that further consideration be given to the manner and to the force with which we should make our views known to the United States and, presumably, to the United Kingdom as well.

TELEGRAM EX-86 Ottawa, January 16, 1950

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

Following for Matthews from Plumptre, Begins: The Tripartite Working Group here discussed this morning your WA-89 of January 13th. Rasminsky was present. He leaves for Washington tonight. I told him that you were arranging for him to have discussions with Labouisse and others.

2. Rasminsky said he had some misgivings about the proposed discussions because WA-89 seemed to imply that further discussion in Washington was undesirable unless and until we could suggest some alternative to the plans being put forward by ECA. I replied that I felt quite sure that you would not be arranging for these discussions in Washington unless the Ambassador would approve of them. In these discussions Rasminsky will emphasize that he is putting forward his own personal views which are shared by a number of his friends here but that there has been no consideration of these views as yet in Cabinet.

3. In paragraph 16 of WA-89 it is suggested that "we must decide whether or not we wish to have our objections put forward definitely and "on the record"". There is no (repeat no) intention here to make any formal representations to United States authorities. The type of discussion that has taken place and that Mr. Rasminsky will undertake is all that we had in mind. Mr. Heeney's letter to Mr. Wrong of December 29th did suggest that the matter might be raised with Mr. Acheson, but only because it seemed opportune and not (repeat not) because it was essential to raise this matter formally or at a high level.

4. There has never been any suggestion here that Canada could completely change or reverse the direction of United States policy in this matter. It may, however, be possible to exercise a certain amount of pressure from time to time and at different levels. The outcome of your talks in Washington so far seems to be satisfactory. However, there was agreement in our group that before pressing much harder and at higher levels it would be necessary to get guidance from the Government. It is probable that this guidance will be sought when our Minister returns from Colombo about February 10th. Meanwhile discussions will go on at the official level. In addition we are expecting to get opinions from our missions in Europe.

5. In paragraph 5 of WA-89 the suggestion is made that Mr. Vernon of State Department might come up here to carry forward the discussions we have already had with Willoughby on the proposal to put European Integration on the agenda of G.A.T.T. While there can be no objection to Vernon coming here we shall probably not be in a position to say anything very definite until Cabinet discussion has taken place. Unfortunately our Minister will not get back until our delegation has left for the G.A.T.T. meeting. Ends.

Washington, January 21, 1950

Dear Rasminsky:

It is very gratifying to me that our paper on Intra-European Currency Transferability and Liberalization of Trade† had the effect of bringing forth your most interesting comments.

You have clearly recognized our definite intention to introduce a "sniff of the market" — destined to grow into full-blown competition — by means of the ECU.[27] Admittedly, the ECU is not devised for an ideal world (which would not need it), but for the world of bilateralism in which Europe finds itself today and, in the absence of some such effort toward integration, probably tomorrow too.

We are quite aware of the problem of translating national incentives into individual incentives. In fact, this whole matter is under active consideration both here in Washington and in Paris. We do hope and trust that ways and means can be found to have national policies short of export controls exert the desired influences on private initiative.

The main problem raised in your letter is whether what we understand by "European integration" is an end in itself and, if not, whether and to what extent it would tend to either foster or obstruct global balance of payments equilibrium. While I entirely agree with you that European integration as such is not our ultimate objective, I firmly believe that it would have great merits of its own. For one, Intra-European trade has been lagging behind Europe's trade with the rest of the world and only quite recently has it reached pre-war levels. Furthermore, it has certain political implications which I need not describe in detail. The competition promoted by a relatively free trade area in Western Europe would contribute greatly to the reduction of existing inflationary pressures. Lower prices would not only tend to raise the volume of Intra-European trade, but that of exports to the Western Hemisphere. In the longer run, the growth of productivity associated with a sizeable free trade area is bound to raise the export potential and real income of Europe.

[27] European Clearing Unit

The issue of whether ECU will represent a step toward or away from dollar balance is clearly recognized by ECA. In view of the above-mentioned benefits that would flow from it, I do not admit that integration would necessarily or even probably lead to a worsening of the prospects for dollar viability. Whatever possible risks ECU may entail, they will depend a great deal on the terms of settlement of Intra-European balances and on the incentives these terms of settlement will provide in pushing dollar exports. Also, because the U.S. market is admittedly harder to crack, we believe that more progress can be made now within Europe than in pushing for an immediate solution of the dollar aspect to Europe's problems.

While I did not want to take up your generous offer to consider a reply unnecessary, I am sure you will understand that time does not allow my answer to do full justice to your very stimulating letter.

With best regards and all my wishes for a happy 1950, I am

Sincerely yours,

CONFIDENTIAL Washington, January 26, 1950

Dear Mr. Heeney:

You will have noted from our messages WA-175 of January 24th† and WA-187 of January 25th† that the National Advisory Council, in considering the E.C.A. plan for a European Clearing Union, has laid down certain principles which qualify the original E.C.A. proposal. Two of these principles go some way towards meeting the apprehensions felt in Ottawa about the effect of the scheme. One of them would protect the operations of the International Monetary Fund, and another, even more important from our point of view, seeks to keep alive the doctrine of non-discrimination and to limit the danger that the Clearing Union, including the whole of the sterling area, would tend to perpetuate the present discriminatory restrictions on transactions with dollar countries.

It remains to be seen, of course, what effect these reservations will have on the outcome of the discussions which are just beginning in Paris. My point in writing to you is to say that we have picked up a good deal of evidence in various quarters that the criticisms which were made in Ottawa, of the original E.C.A. scheme have had some influence in bringing about the decision of the National Advisory Council. In particular, Mr. Rasminsky, in an informal letter to Mr. Bissell, which put forward ably and briefly the main points of our concern, has played quite a part in the process of policy formation here. This is an interesting example of how at times we can influence major decisions in Washington through skilful and unofficial comment introduced at the right time and in the right place. This particular case will help to maintain the high esteem in which the views of the financial advisers of the Canadian Government are held in Washington.

Yours sincerely,

IV. EUROPEAN ECONOMIC INTEGRATION

10. Mr. Plumptre reported that, following receipt of information as to certain proposals that had been put forward in the United States concerning European economic integration and particularly concerning a currency clearing union, some discussion among Canadian officials had taken place and some indication of views held at the Canadian official level had been made to various U.S. officials. It seemed desirable to have some consideration of the question by the Committee particularly in relation to the position that should be taken by the Canadian representatives to the GATT meeting, if the matter should come up.

The currency clearing union proposal, which had been drafted in ECA, was the one that had been given most serious consideration. The proposal was devised on the thesis that the formation of a wider market in Europe with fewer barriers either of exchange control or of quantitative restriction between the European countries should lead to an increase in competition and so to greater efficiency and to lower costs and prices. Canadian officials who had discussed the matter were, however, afraid that the arrangement would be likely to lead to the development of a wider soft currency bloc with high-cost production aimed at a high measure of self-sufficiency. The official view in the United States was that the union, with its extension of discriminatory elimination of trade restrictions in Europe, would lead ultimately toward multilateralism since greater competition would reduce costs and put European goods in a generally competitive position. There were, however, some misgivings in Washington, particularly in the Treasury, similar to those which were generally felt in Ottawa.

It appeared that Canadian discussion with U.S. officials had made some impression and had led to a certain shift in emphasis. The most recent indication had been the instructions under which Mr. Hoffman had gone to Europe to carry forward further discussions. However, it was clear that Mr. Hoffman did not share the worries that others felt, and that he was anxious to get some sort of Western European soft currency bloc established both for economic and political reasons.

In the agenda for the GATT meeting there was an item on discriminatory quantitative restrictions, and it seemed likely that the general European question might come up. It might be desirable for the Canadian delegation to be free to raise the points of doubt and concern which were felt in Ottawa. There had also been enquiry from the High Commissioner in London concerning the Canadian attitude toward the wider extension of elimination of trade restrictions on a discriminatory basis.

11. Mr. Deutsch pointed out that discriminatory liberalization of trade, treating European countries as a separate unit, would be contrary to the principles of GATT. The question was whether we should take definite action to oppose this sort of development or at least to insist on adequate safeguards. The repercussions of such action might be serious. Ministerial authority for whatever position was taken would be desirable.

In the Canadian loan agreement with the United Kingdom, the provision was that the United Kingdom should make no discriminatory relaxation of restrictions except in favour of war shattered countries. The matter had been under consideration at Washington in September, and the relaxations therein contemplated by the United Kingdom had gone forward. It was for consideration whether we should allow our entire position under the loan agreement to go by default. An immediate question concerned the position of dependent overseas territories and whether we should be willing to allow them to make concessions in favour of the United Kingdom alone, or the other Commonwealth countries or European and soft currency countries, without extending such concessions in our favour.

Mr. Deutsch mentioned that he had been invited to go to Washington for discussions by the U.S. delegation in connection with the GATT meeting. It might be for consideration whether it would be desirable to accept.

12. The Deputy Minister of Finance said that, so far as official action by the Canadian delegation at the GATT meeting was concerned, he felt that it would be essential to acquaint the Cabinet thoroughly with the position and secure its direction. Even if no action was to be taken along the lines suggested, it was important that the Ministers should be acquainted with the situation. There seemed to be everything to be said in favour of having the Canadian delegation stress the importance of safeguards against the establishment of a new high-cost area.

13. The Chairman thought that it would be desirable for Mr. Deutsch to accept the invitation to attend the discussions in Washington. So far as the further extension of discriminatory relaxation of trade restrictions was concerned, it seemed clear that if the United States took a position in opposition we should do so. If, however, the United States came out in favour, there was more doubt as to what our position should be.

14. The Committee, after further discussion, agreed:

(a) That a report be prepared for submission to the Cabinet and for the information of the Minister of Trade and Commerce concerning proposals and possible developments in relation to European economic integration and a European currency clearing union; and

(b) That the question of the position to be taken by the Canadian delegation to the GATT meeting be given further consideration following the return of Mr. Deutsch from discussions in Washington.

Note du Comité interministériel sur la politique du commerce extérieur

Memorandum by Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy

ICETP DOC NO.63 [Ottawa], February 10, 1950

SECRET

EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

The Integration Policy

1. Over the past ten or twelve months the E.C.A. has put on a drive for European Integration. Mr. Paul Hoffman has made a number of speeches; the countries receiving Marshall Plan aid have to some extent reduced trade barriers between themselves; further reductions have been proposed; and a permanent European Currency Clearing Union to replace the present payments scheme has been under discussion. Very recently Mr. Hoffman's plans have received a set-back in Paris and, during the present election campaign in the United Kingdom, they will not be pressed.

2. The term "European Integration" is a vague one but, in the minds of its E.C.A. sponsors and the European participants, it has included the following measures:

(a) Removal of import quotas and similar restrictions as between European countries so that these countries discriminate in favour of each other and against the rest of the world;

(b) Provision of short-term credits to finance trade between European countries. These credits underly the so-called Intra-European Payments Scheme, sponsored last year by E.C.A. and now in effect. A country which is called upon by its neighbours for large credits becomes entitled to additional E.C.A. aid.

So far, European Integration has not included any tariff preferences. However, as between countries where trade is controlled by quotas, licenses, etc., tariffs are not very important.

3. The chief purposes of Mr. Hoffman and the E.C.A. in sponsoring European Integration are as follows:

(a) To give Western European countries, including Western Germany, the moral will and the economic strength to stand together in case of attack from the East;

(b) To strengthen their productive and competitive positions so that they will be able to become independent of Marshall Aid by the time it ends (1952);

(c) To give Mr. Hoffman some achievement in the year 1949-50, to which he can point when seeking from Congress further Marshall Plan funds for 1950-51.

Conflict With Other United States Policies

4. European Integration, with its system of trade discrimination and special credit facilities, conflicts with the general trend of American commercial and financial policy. This has been strongly opposed to "preferences" of any sort; through the GATT and ITO and the Monetary Fund the United States has supported "non-discrimination" and "multilateralism". Therefore European Integration, while strongly pressed by E.C.A., has been regarded with mixed feelings by the U.S. State Department and Treasury. While there are some who claim that the lowering of trade barriers within Europe (while maintaining discrimination against the rest of the world) will lead to greater efficiency and increased trade, others fear that Europe will develop into a protected, inefficient, high cost area. Its political and economic power would be sapped; its ability to sell abroad, and therefore to buy abroad, would be cut down. The more resources European countries use in trade with each other the less they will have available for external trade. Trade with North America might balance; but at a low instead of a high level.

5. In the summer of 1949 the E.C.A. policy of European Integration raised a special problem with the United Kingdom. In 1945 the U.K. had borrowed $3.75 billions from U.S.A., and under the Loan Agreement the U.K. had given some broad undertakings not to discriminate against goods from the U.S.A. European Integration would almost certainly involve the U.K. in illegal discrimination. Further, the U.K. felt that they could not give the Marshall Plan countries better treatment than Commonwealth countries (other than Canada); so U.K. planned to give the same trade benefits to the Commonwealth (other than Canada). Finally the U.K. decided that they should give the same benefits to all except "hard currency" countries. This involved discrimination against U.S.A. which went clearly beyond what was permitted by the U.S.-U.K. Loan Agreement. However, the U.S. Administration decided to accept it and, following the Tripartite Talks in Washington last September, gave indirect approval to what the U.K. was doing.

6. The reduction of trade barriers, originally planned amongst European countries alone, has thus spread out to other soft-currency countries. Sweden has already given to the Sterling Area the same benefits as she is giving to the other European countries. The official policy of the U.S., while changing from time to time, has recently favoured the spreading of such benefits as widely as possible; i.e. the Area included within the discriminatory system should not be confined to Europe but should be spread as wide as the payments position of the individual countries would allow. This approaches the policy of the G.A.T.T., where trade discrimination, while generally frowned upon, is permitted if it is needed to overcome difficulties in a country's balance of payments. However, Mr. Hoffman and his advisers still appear to prefer the narrower concept of "European Integration" for the reasons outlined in paragraph 3 above. U.S. policy cannot be regarded as settled.

Canadian Attitude

7. Canadian officials have, from the beginning, been sceptical about the practicability and desirability of the more ambitious schemes for "integrating" Europe. A glance at a map may suggest that Europe is a homogeneous group of countries, and there is no doubt that these countries have much in common. This means that they have a strong interest in working together, particularly against dictatorships. But economic integration goes far beyond mere working together. The history of Europe, and its geography and topography, do not seem to lead towards integration. Many of these countries have far greater interests outside Europe than with each other; the United Kingdom is an obvious example. In the last analysis, the real justification for the drive for integration is defence against the East; and if economic integration weakens rather than strengthens Europe it is worse than useless for this purpose. In short, there seems to be no good reason why Europe should be built up, even temporarily, into a discriminatory trading bloc — no reason why there should be any exception, in the case of Europe, to the general policy of multilateral, non-discriminatory trade and payments, which has generally been pursued since the war by the Government of Canada as well as the Government of the United States.

8. The risks of European Integration for Canada are greater than for the United States — at least from the purely economic point of view. If integration did lead to a trade balance at a very low level between North America and Europe, the economy of the United States would not be severely damaged; few sections of the United States depend upon overseas exports for their prosperity. Moreover, if trade can be balanced, whether at a low or high level, there is no more need for Congress to vote money to aid European reconstruction. But in many sections of Canada overseas exports remain vital. If integration follows its present path it leads towards European self sufficiency for such products as wheat, timber and fish. An outcome of European integration which would be quite tolerable in the U.S.A. would have most painful results here.

9. Some Canadian officials have already indicated some of these misgivings to U.S. officials. It is believed that these informal approaches have had some influence on the trend of U.S. thinking — strengthening the position of those in Washington who have been opposing the more extreme and exclusive forms of "integration".

10. The most difficult questions arise for Canada in connection with proposals to extend the area of discrimination beyond the Marshall Plan countries. For Canada, as for the U.S.A., this problem arose first in connection with the post-war loan agreement. Our Agreement, like the American one, allows the U.K. to discriminate to some extent in favour of "war torn countries"; and there could be little objection if the U.K. extended this to all Marshall Plan countries including some, like Sweden, that were not "war torn". But the further proposals of the U.K. involved more serious considerations for Canada. These proposals were:

(i) that the Commonwealth (other than Canada) and other soft currency countries should get the benefit of reduction in U.K. import barriers, and

(ii) that the Colonies should reduce their import barriers in the same discriminatory way as the U.K. itself. This would result, for example, in increased discrimination against Canadian goods entering the West Indies.

Hence, when the Minister of Finance replied to these proposals by the U.K. authorities, after the Tripartite Talks, he merely "noted" what the U.K. were planning to do with indirect U.S. approval; he gave no formal approval on behalf of Canada.

11. The more recent proposals for widening the area of discrimination (paragraph 6 above) will, if they are pressed, raise further problems. At first sign it would appear to be to Canada's advantage that other countries should follow as closely as possible the general policies laid down in the G.A.T.T. This would mean the extension of trade-liberalization as widely as balances-of-payments of individual countries would allow. On the other hand, Europe is not likely to cure its diseases of dollar shortage and incipient inflation by embracing too closely the Sterling Area or other soft currency countries which are afflicted by even worse attacks of the same diseases. The extension of "European Integration" to include the Sterling Area seems to involve unnecessary risks and an undesirable and unwarranted extension of discrimination at this time.

12. This suggests that a rule-of-thumb application of the rule of non-discrimination is not a satisfactory guide under the present disturbed conditions of world trade; individual proposals must be judged on their merits in the light of Canada's immediate interests. This, however, does not involve any question of the ultimate advantages to Canada of the multilateral goals which the Government has been pursuing during and since the war. These goals are formally set out in the G.A.T.T., the Havana Charter, the International Monetary Fund and other international agreements. They are of fundamental importance to a country as dependent on trade as Canada. Decisions on the merits of individual proposals must never be taken without reference to these goals.

Conclusions

13. It appears desirable that Canadian officials should, under present circumstances and as opportunities arise,

(a) Oppose the more extreme and exclusive forms of "European Integration";

(b) Oppose the extension of the European discriminatory bloc to include Sterling Area and other soft currency countries.

Dear Dick [Murray]:

EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

When Deutsch and Isbister came back from their visit to Washington earlier this week they brought interesting news about European Integration. I gather that Mr. Hoffman was considerably rebuffed during his recent visit to Paris. The United Kingdom apparently took the lead in refusing to take any further steps towards trade liberalization and none of the European countries seem to have much affection for the proposed European Currency Clearing Union.

2. I gather that this may prove to be a turning point. From now on the United States may relax its pressure for integration.

3. I know that you have never felt that Mr. Hoffman's need for rabbits to pull out of the hat before Congressional Committees was a fundamental reason for his desire to achieve something tangible in the way of European Integration. On the other hand I think you will agree that he had hoped to be able to play it up during this session of Congress. Do you think that there is much likelihood that he will make another effort to bring the European countries along with him?

4. I gather from Deutsch and Isbister that the present mood of E.C.A. is pretty defeatist. Apparently E.C.A. may not even ask Congress for the $3.1 billions provided in the President's budget speech for E.C.A. in 1950-51. If Mr. Hoffman lowers his sites he may well decide to give up his attempt to integrate Europe.

5. In any case, I gather from Deutsch and Isbister that there will certainly be no United States pressure on the United Kingdom until after the United Kingdom elections — no pressure of any sort and this, of course, includes pressure towards European Integration.

6. The changed position in Paris and Washington has taken us rather by surprise. We had, of course, anticipated a continuance of United States pressure towards integration and had been trying to decide what attitudes Canadian officials should take, not only towards European Integration itself, but towards proposals for extending the European soft currency bloc to include other countries, or groups of countries such as the Sterling Area. In view of the GATT meeting beginning on February 23rd we thought that we ought to make up our minds fairly soon. Hence a paper has been prepared, dated February 10th, for consideration by the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy and will be considered next week. I enclose a copy of it. It has been modified to take into account the new developments in Washington and Paris. However, it probably would not have seen the light of day if those developments had taken place some time earlier. In short the urgency of the whole matter has disappeared — and, of course, nobody here thinks of considering anything unless it is urgent!

Yours sincerely,
A.F.W. PLUMPTRE

GATT; MATTERS FOR DISCUSSION AT THE FORTHCOMING MEETING

1. Mr. Deutsch said that he and Mr. Isbister had recently had discussions in Washington with the U.S. representatives to the GATT meeting. One of the more important questions that had been discussed had been the handling of the problem of discriminatory import controls, on which a report had to be made by March 31.

The U.K. reply to the general questionnaire on the subject had been drafted to set forth both the details of the U.K. controls and also the justification and argument in relation to them. The reply had been presented to the U.S. authorities in advance and they had indicated that if it went forward as drafted they would be forced to challenge it. In view of the undesirability of having an open argument on the underlying policy at this stage, the United Kingdom had revised their report and it would now be purely factual. The United States would not, itself, raise policy questions in relation to it and would probably not follow up any action that might be initiated by other parties.

In part, the U.S. reluctance to go into this matter at the present time arose out of uncertainty as to what to do following the recent OEEC discussions in Paris. Mr. Hoffman had hoped to get agreement in relation to a clearing union, relaxation of quantitative restrictions on trade, dual pricing and the appointment of a "superman" to head the work of OEEC. Only in connection with the last had there been any success. In Washington there was now a large area of disagreement as to what U.S. policy should be in relation to discriminatory relaxation of trade restrictions and in the circumstances they wished to avoid having to take a definite position on the general question at the Geneva discussions.

A further question in which the United States would be most interested at the GATT meeting was the use of quantitative restrictions, whether discriminatory or not, for protectionist purposes. U.S. officials were of the view that a large proportion of present restrictions by European countries — they estimated about two-thirds — were imposed for protectionist reasons and went beyond what balance of payments considerations would justify.

2. Mr. Isbister said that he thought that the U.S. approach in connection with use of restrictions for protectionist purposes might be to raise points of detail in connection with the observance of the rules of GATT rather than to go at the matter from a broader and more general base. So far as the question of discriminatory relaxation of trade restrictions was concerned, there were two schools of thought among the U.S. officials: that which held that it would be desirable to press forward with relaxations, even though on a discriminatory basis, if a unified approach could be secured by the European countries and if liberalization within that area at least seemed a hopeful possibility; and, secondly, that which held that relaxation within a given area was not a step toward general liberalization but rather created a special bloc fenced off from the rest of the world which would be likely to develop a tendency toward isolation of a permanent character. One group in the State Department and ECA in general tended to favour the first view. The Treasury and a different group in the State Department were opposed to that attitude and adopted the second approach.

3. The Committee, after discussion, noted the report concerning talks in Washington on certain matters likely to arise at the Geneva meeting of GATT.

II. EUROPEAN ECONOMIC INTEGRATION; DISCUSSIONS IN WASHINGTON

(A general report on European integration dated February 10, 1950 was circulated — ICETP Document No. 63).

4. Mr. Deutsch reported that discussions in Washington indicated that U.K. objections to the proposals that had been made for a new European payments arrangement in Paris were pretty fundamental. The United Kingdom were of the view that the scheme as presented, embodying a clearing centre for the settlement of balances between participating countries, would mean the supersession of the use of sterling for clearing purposes in the area in which sterling at present operated. The assets of the clearing union would become preferable to sterling and participants would tend to convert their sterling balances into such assets. This would mean strain on the sterling area. In general, the tendency would be for the U.K. quota in the clearing union to be exhausted through such conversions and U.K.

deficits would have to be settled in gold. The United Kingdom would tend continually to be pressed against the gold points.

To meet this opposition by the United Kingdom, the U.S. representatives had indicated a willingness to put in additional resources to guard against such a development — although without coverage for sterling balances built up during the war. The United Kingdom was not satisfied, however, partly because the underwriting would be only for a limited period but also because they were worried about the displacement of sterling as a currency of account. Prestige considerations were mingled in the question. The dominant theme of U.K. comment on these matters had reflected a constant fear of the loss of gold or dollars.

While the present payments arrangements would continue until the end of June, there was general hope that some new scheme might be arrived at. The United Kingdom thought that the aim should not be a clearing union but rather the establishment of a mechanism for the financing of marginal payments. The basic structure should be a series of bilateral monetary agreements. One type of agreement was that which the United Kingdom had with Sweden under which both countries undertook to hold the currency of the other without limit on the understanding that restrictions on the flow of goods would be adjusted to prevent balances getting too large. There was no provision for gold payments in the agreement. A second type was exemplified by the agreement with Switzerland, under which each party undertook to hold the currency of the other up to a certain point but with provision for payments in gold beyond that. In a sense the arrangement with Canada was a bilateral agreement at the other end of the scale, since we did not accept sterling. It appeared that the United Kingdom were now attempting to arrive at as many agreements as possible on the Swedish model. The opposite approach to the payments arrangement was that of the United States, Belgium and France. They wished to do away with such bilateral agreements and set up a system under which settlements would be made multilaterally.

5. The Deputy Governor of the Bank of Canada suggested that basically the U.K. situation was that it could stand a liberalization of trade restrictions on a multilateral basis — something of the sort that had been going forward — if it was balanced on the other side by bilateral monetary arrangements. Alternatively it could contemplate multilateral monetary arrangements if it could rely on bilateral trade adjustments. The difficulty arose when the United Kingdom had to face the uncertainties and problems of multilateral arrangements both in the trade and monetary fields.

An important element in the U.K. position was the desire to maintain the existence of the sterling area. However, in general the United Kingdom took the position that any modification of the present arrangements among the sterling area countries would amount to a termination of the area itself. It seemed doubtful whether this view really exhausted the possibilities. It might, for example, be feasible to have exchange controls exercised by members of the sterling area with regard to one another along with quotas in the dollar pool without destroying the fundamentals of the sterling area. With such elements of control, the danger to the U.K. position might be reduced. It was possible that some adjustments of this sort might be worth looking into.

6. Mr. Isbister said that discussion in Washington had disclosed some concern as to the stability of the sterling area. It was felt that there was serious danger to the U.K. position in the absence of any sanctions on drawings from the central reserves. There was some feeling that while the U.K. reserves had been increasing recently a period was approaching when there would be a further drain upon them.

7. The Committee noted the reports on discussions concerning European payments arrangements.

CONFIDENTIAL Washington, February 18, 1950

Dear Wynne [Plumptre]:

I was glad to receive the memorandum on European Integration (dated February 10th), and also to receive your report on the views brought back by Deutsch and Isbister.

I was surprised by the rather gloomy views which they brought back from Washington. Things do not change from black to white and back to black again quite so markedly as I think would be suggested by the reports of Deutsch and Isbister. After all, this Government is supposed to be the greatest example of the checks and balance system ever conceived. What has happened in the integration drive is that the checking and balancing forces have now swung into operation and they will no doubt have a considerable effect on the kind of new payments scheme which will emerge in a few months' time.

The main point I would like to make is that I am confident that ECA will not relax its pressure for "integration". Senior ECA officials continue to be convinced that they are right to keep on working as hard as possible at "integration", by which they mean a multilateral payments plan and the greatest possible elimination of trade restrictions.

Some State Department and Treasury "universalists" (as they are called by ECA officials) and others may place certain restraints on ECA integration schemes. Certainly the restraints which have so far been imposed by the National Advisory Council are not stopping Mr. Hoffman in his campaign, although knowledge of the disagreement in Washington doubtless makes it possible for the opposition outside the United States to make itself felt more effectively. There are certainly difficulties in Europe: It is now evident that the U.K. will place serious obstacles in the way of the creation of the all-embracing payments plan envisaged by the ECA; most of the OEEC countries may hold back to such an extent in their relaxation of trade restrictions that the European trade picture, in a few months time, will be very different indeed from the clear, neat one which was sketched by Bissell, your friend Lincoln Gordon, and Tasca in Paris last December.

In our conversation with Bissell last week (letter of February 9th to Mr. Heeney†) the strongest impression I had was that of ECA's deep disappointment with the degree of willingness of the United Kingdom to take risks to work out what ECA would regard as an adequate European payments plan. I have not heard anything about other European countries demurring in any very serious way from going into a full-blown payments scheme. The one exception to this which Bissell mentioned was Norway. The magnitude of the Norwegian problem, however, is such that there should not be too much difficulty in getting it straightened away.

Lincoln Gordon, who has been closely involved in these questions in Paris for some time, discussed ECA's position and prospects as far as the payments plan is concerned, with us at George Ignatieff's house on Tuesday night. Gordon is a firm believer in the approach which ECA is taking to Europe's trade problems. The ECA arguments are all based on the premise that convertibility is still many years away and that the best thing that can be done in the meantime is to expand the area of free trade and competition within Europe. I imagine that by now you are all too familiar with these arguments. The most interesting thing which Gordon had to say, I thought, was his positive assertion that ECA would get 65 per cent or 75 per cent of what they are aiming for in the way of a new payments scheme before June 30. Gordon's impression was that the pessimism and disappointment about the results in Paris had been exaggerated in the press and elsewhere because everyone had had such high hopes as to what would be accomplished. It was common to hear in ECA in the weeks preceding the ministerial meetings in Paris, remarks to the effect, "Thank God the British are for these Clearing Union proposals". The thought behind this sort of statement was that, since the U.K. Government would not be in favour of the proposals unless they had fully thought through all their implications, it did mean that the working out of the details of the proposals would be a comparatively easy task.

The picture is now, I think, something like this: ECA are as convinced as ever of the rightness of their proposals. They have, however, run into serious obstacles both in Europe and in the United States (not to mention the reservations of Canadian officials, which have their effect in Washington). The Washington obstacles were probably expected and indeed in some measure invited by the ECA's tactics in not clearing their proposals with the National Advisory Council. Hoffman and Bissell are, however, "great salesmen", and probably do not have many doubts about their ability to carry the day in Washington for any reasonable scheme, if they can get the Europeans to agree on a plan. The obstacles which have been created by the U.K. are, however, quite different. They hurt more because they were unexpected. What we will see for the next little while, I think, is a continuation by Hoffman of strong pressure toward getting a real multilateral payments plan with its necessary accompaniments — the reduction of trade restrictions and the elimination of dual pricing.

Only yesterday, Hoffman, speaking in New York, said that, "we must act with vision and even impatience to seize this historically opportune moment to help accelerate European integration. In this connection, may I say that in a few days we expect to lay before Congress specific plans for putting considerably more power behind this part of our program. We want Europe to accomplish in 25 months what might under less compelling circumstances easily require 25 years." In any event the curtain will go up on February 21st, when Hoffman is scheduled to start the hearings before Congress.

I am enclosing extracts from Hoffman's speech of February 16th,† which will show, I think, that he does not intend to relax his drive for integration.

Yours sincerely,

J.R. MURRAY

1. Robertson met with Makins, Jessup and Alphand this morning to learn the status of the Three-Power discussions of "development of long-term economic relations between North America and Europe".[28] The question had been put on the tripartite agenda by the French, who were anxious to plan now for a continuing association in the economic and financial fields between the countries of Western Europe and North America which could carry on after the ECA programme had come to an end.

2. The French had in mind some form of external association between the OEEC countries on the one hand and the United States and Canada on the other, which would enable the North American countries to take part in the Working Committees and the Council of OEEC and use these existing agencies for the continuing study of relations between dollar and non-dollar economies. Alphand explained that they had initially explored the possibility of setting up an agency for this purpose under the aegis of Article 2[29] of the North Atlantic Treaty, but to this they saw two objections, each, for the time being at least, very formidable. It would be unrealistic for the countries of Western Europe to address themselves to the problems of dollar - non-dollar relationships without the cooperation of Germany and the other "neutral" countries which were not parties to the North Atlantic Pact. At the same time France was not at present prepared to have Germany brought within the circle of the North Atlantic Treaty countries. In the second place, they were very much opposed to the establishment of any new functions of existing agencies. OEEC was already, though perhaps from a limiting point of view, concerned with many aspects of the economic and financial relationships between the countries of Western Europe and those of North America. It would, he thought, be wise so far as Europe was concerned to build on this firm foundation and use the existing OEEC organization as the European counterpart of their trans-Atlantic partners in studying the problems of commercial and economic policy which derive from the dollar gap.

3. As Makins explained it, the United Kingdom response to this French initiative up to now has been sympathetic but cautious. They did not exclude the possibility of Germany and the other neutrals being associated with economic and social arrangements that might be undertaken under the North Atlantic Pact at an earlier date than the French were now prepared to contemplate. They were not, however, pressing the French at this time to alter their attitude toward German participation, but were not very happy about fixing now what might turn out to be the basic pattern for cooperation in economic policies between the countries of Europe and the countries of North America, and they fear that if OEEC were to be the agent and representative of the European countries in these studies, which they wish to see made, it would crystallize the post-ECA position in a form which they are not yet ready to accept.

4. Jessup said that the United States administration had in preparation a really great effort over the next twelve to eighteen months to bring home to Congress and the American people all the implications of the creditor position of the United States in the context of the present world situation. They were determined to make a great and urgent effort to see that the United States for its part would do everything possible to narrow the dollar gap from its side. It would, however, be politically impossible for them to get the response they hope for from their own people if they should appear to be working alone towards this objective. They hoped they could count on full co-operation from Canada, and they also felt they needed some new evidence that the countries of Western Europe were equally mindful of the dangers which lay ahead if long-term economic relationships between North America and Europe were not put on a stable and mutually satisfactory footing. They were not as concerned as the English or the French about the kind of machinery that might be used for this new effort. Their preoccupation was with the substantive problems and their hope was that in some way our four countries could get together now to initiate a new and serious attack. Jessup was inclined to think that the present association of the United States with OEEC countries, both by its bilateral agreements with each of them and by its intimate and informal participation in the workings of OEEC itself, was probably adequate. If some way could be found for giving Canada a similar, though perhaps less formal, association with OEEC which would enable us to take part as principals in a new examination of what could be done to mitigate the difficulties which now beset trade and financial relationships between the dollar and non-dollar countries, this would be a real help.

5. The foregoing paragraphs summarize fairly accurately the attitude of the three principal countries as they have developed during fairly desultory discussions in London during the past ten days. All are anxious to reach some preliminary conclusions this week which might take the form either of a single four Power declaration, or perhaps, though this is less likely, of a statement by Mr. Acheson, with which Mr. Pearson could be associated, with a suitable statement in response from Bevin and Schuman, who would in either case commend to their colleagues in OEEC the suggestion that Canada be associated with the OEEC countries in a new study of what could be done to solve our international economic problems.

6. We are to have a further meeting with the same group tomorrow morning at eleven, for further examination of the implications of the various suggestions which have been put forward, and would be very glad to have your preliminary comments as soon as possible.

Repeat Washington EX-809.
Following from Heeney for immediate delivery to Robertson, Begins: Your 912 of May 15. Long term economic relations between North America and Europe; Canadian association with OEEC.

1. Following are our immediate reactions within this Department:

(a) Proposed association of Canada with OEEC involves political decisions that can scarcely be made quickly.

(b) These decisions could only be made immediately if Canada's new relationships flowed clearly from the provisions of the North Atlantic Treaty and this is obviously not the case.

(c) While there might be some support on the official level for ultimate association with OEEC and while this possibility has been discussed favourably with other Departments, we feel sure that opposition would harden if an attempt were made to take immediate and precipitate action. We believe that our proposals relating to Article 2 involving exploration by experts of participation by Canada and other countries in expanded machinery before 1952 are all that will command quick and ready agreement here.

(d) If a submission is to be made to the Government on these matters, it would come best from the Minister after his return from London.

(e) The most outstanding objection to the proposal at the end of your paragraph 5 for a four-power declaration or similar statement is that the only country apparently affected by the change and the only country taking on new responsibilities would be Canada.

(f) Apparently Jessup says that present association of United States with OEEC is probably adequate. At first sight and from a long run point of view, we are inclined to doubt this. Ends.

TOP SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Prime Minister from Pearson, Begins: You will be aware of a proposal which has been discussed here by officials from the United States, United Kingdom, France and Canada, for the informal association of the United States and Canada with the practical work of the organization for European economic cooperation on economic problems of common interest. This association with OEEC is intended to cover the period during which the proposed Committee of Deputies to the Council will be examining the question of the possible need for longer term economic arrangements under Article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty. A decision one way or the other on this proposal will have to be taken by Wednesday night since it is envisaged that a joint public statement by the four Foreign Ministers concerned should be made at the end of the Council session on Thursday.

2. I am convinced that we should examine this proposal most seriously and we should not be content to dispose of it on the basis of what may be fairly narrow considerations.

3. It is true that even our informal association with the OEEC, along with the United States, might be interpreted as implying certain obligations on our part. I doubt, however, whether any such implied obligations are greater than those which would result from action at this stage under Article 2.

4. Acheson has spoken to me of the importance which he attaches to increased economic cooperation between Europe and North America as the background for the campaign which the United States Administration is preparing to launch within the next twelve months to modify those United States policies and practices which are aggravating the dollar difficulties of other countries, including Canada. It is my understanding that the other three countries (particularly France and the United States) regard the proposed statement as of such importance, for the purpose of reinforcing the campaign in the United States as well as for other reasons, that they will in all probability issue some such statement even though Canada cannot be associated with it. I think you will agree that it would be most unfortunate for the impression to develop in Canada that we had missed an opportunity to participate in an arrangement which appeared to offer some promise of improving our trading relations with the OEEC countries and, indirectly, of increasing the opportunities for trade with the United States.

5. There may also be some disappointment in Canada if, as now seems inevitable in view of considerations such as those mentioned in Robertson's telegram No. 912 of May 15th, no constructive action is taken at this stage under Article 2 of the Treaty. If the only decision which the Council is likely to take on this subject is that the question of implementing Article 2 should be studied by the proposed Committee of Deputies, it seems to me important for us to be able to show that pending the completion of the study (and in order to give some reality to the study) we are giving attention to the immediate problems involved in economic relations within the North Atlantic community through at least informal and limited association with OEEC. If nothing substantial can be accomplished under Article 2 at the present time we may be open to some criticism at home for refusing to take part in such a temporary arrangement, particularly if it is announced that the United States has indicated its willingness to participate.

6. As you are aware, the problem of Germany has been a subject of much concern to the other three Foreign Ministers during their meetings over the past week and is also very much in the minds of Foreign Ministers at the Council meeting. The only feasible way of bringing the German economy into closer relations with the North Atlantic community during the immediate future is through OEEC. From the political as well as the economic point of view it is probably important that Canada and the United States, as well as the other North Atlantic countries, should be associated with Western Germany in the OEEC at least until such time as France and certain other countries are prepared to have their economic relations with Germany brought under the North Atlantic Treaty.

7. I hope to have an opportunity to discuss this proposal with Mr. Howe on his arrival here. Any further views which may develop out of that discussion will be sent to you as soon as possible. I would emphasize again the need for an early decision on the question of our association with the statement which is likely to be made on Thursday. Ends.

ASSOCIATION OF CANADA AND THE U.S.A. WITH OEEC

Following for Mr. Pearson from Heeney, Begins: This is the message referred to in the Prime Minister's message sent earlier today.

2. After discussion with Ministers the Prime Minister asked me to call the following points to your attention in the draft statement quoted in your 917 of May 16:†

(a) The initials OEEC are not well known in Canada; the words should be spelled out at least on the first occasion where the title is used;

[30]Voir Canada, Chambre des Communes, Débats, 1950, volume III, pp. 2704-2705.
See Canada, House of Commons Debates, 1950, Volume III, p. 2621.

(b) The reference in paragraph two to the "foreign Minister" of Canada is not correct;

(c) The reference in paragraph five to "four Ministers" is not clear at first sight.

3. The following officials met yesterday: Towers, Clark, Deutsch, Pierce, Beaupré, Plumptre and myself. There was complete agreement that we could not refuse the invitation. Most of those present also felt that it was desirable to accept, but there was some strong disagreement.

4. Those who questioned the desirability of accepting doubted whether there would in fact be any change in the position of the United States; U.S. representatives already attend Council meetings and Committee meetings of OEEC; was not the proposed public statement, including the new association of Canada, a mere publicity device? Constant public references to international cooperation were likely to mislead the public into thinking that action was being taken; actually, the action required to reduce the dollar gap had to be taken individually by countries on both sides of the Atlantic. There was already ample machinery for cooperation; association of Canada with OEEC would add to the already severe personnel problems which were already confronting Canada in trying to maintain membership in a large number of international organizations. Finally, association with OEEC might well open the way to pressure for financial assistance in the future.

5. On the other hand, the following points were advanced. The position of the United States was not really being left unchanged. Indeed the most important feature of the proposed announcement was the more permanent association of the United States with OEEC in the position of a collaborator instead of solely as a donor. Canada's association with OEEC at the same time would emphasize this change in the United States' position and solidify the situation. If Mr. Acheson and U.S. officials felt that such a move would be helpful in their attempt to scale down U.S. obstacles to imports, it should have our support. We had been troubled in the past by isolationist tendencies in OEEC and ECA; our new association would give us an opportunity to combat these tendencies. There would be commercial advantages to us in participating in discussions of the import programmes of the OEEC countries. Our new association would, of course, entail additional personnel in Paris, but the proposed extension and development of OEEC might well be considered as an alternative to quite separate and additional machinery that might otherwise have to be set up under Article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty. There were great advantages to working through OEEC rather than Article 2 because Germany, Sweden, and other countries could be included.

6. In the official discussions, a question was raised regarding paragraph one of your 917. It was not clear whether the phrase "work being undertaken in Washington on problems associated with the dollar gap" referred to Tripartite work or to purely U.S. action. Ends.

Press has welcomed association of Canada and United States with OEEC, though emphasis has been on value of bringing in United States and there has been no specific comment on Canadian participation.

2. United Kingdom and France intend to put matter before OEEC Council (Ministers) on June 2nd. They are thinking of offering Canada and United States:

(a) All documents.

(b) Right to attend all Committees.

(c) Right to attend Executive Committee and Council when they have special interests.

United States already enjoys (a) and (b) in practice and we enjoy (a) through arrangements with United Kingdom.

3. For discussions here can you let us have any advance guidance on what the invitation should contain and what it should exclude. We should also be grateful for your views as to extent and nature of Canadian participation in day to day work of OEEC.

TELEGRAM 1015 London, May 24, 1950

Re your telegram No. 738 of May 23rd,† repeating message from Paris concerning Canadian association with OEEC.

1. The following are our preliminary comments on paragraph 3 of the Paris message.

2. Regarding the nature of the invitation we should think it might take somewhat the form suggested in the second paragraph of the Paris telegram, together with some of the agreed language from the Four-Power communiqué regarding the purpose of the association. In view of the informality of our association, as emphasized in the communiqué, it might be desirable for the invitation to "welcome attendance" by us at the various meetings rather than to offer us the "right to attend". For the same reason it is probably unnecessary to seek a precise definition of what is meant by "attendance" — as distinct from "participation". No doubt, in practice, "attendance" would permit our representatives to "participate" to the degree which seemed appropriate to us in each case.

3. In the cases of the seven-member Executive Committee and of the Council (at either the official or Ministerial level) it is probably understandable that the members of the OEEC might wish to limit our attendance to those occasions "when we have special interests" in the subjects under discussion. It might be desirable, however, for this part of the invitation to indicate that we shall be regarded as having such a special interest not only when, and if, specifically Canadian topics are raised but also when any matters affecting economic relations between North America and Western Europe are under consideration.

4. It is probably too early to attempt to judge the nature and extent of Canadian participation in the day to day work of the OEEC. Our participation will presumably depend in part on the personnel arrangements which it proves practicable to make. We think at this stage that we should aim to be represented fairly regularly at meetings of the Executive Committee and the Council (subject to any limitation which may be imposed on our attendance) and at meetings of the four main "horizontal" committees which are concerned with payments, trade, programmes (or general economic matters) and, probably unavoidably, manpower. We might contemplate restricting our attendance at meetings of the "vertical" committees or subcommittees to those of special interest (e.g., the Food and Agriculture Committee and its Production Plans Sub-Committee).

Your EX-852 of May 23rd† — Canadian association with the OEEC.

1. Before giving our comments on paragraph 3 of your message, it may be useful to recall one or two rather general points concerning United States and Canadian participation in the OEEC. First, as reported in my WA-919 of April 21st,[31] concerning what might be done about Article 2 of the North Atlantic Treaty, there had been some thought given in the Department of State to the idea that the United States and Canada should become members of the OEEC. However, this had been regarded as something which might prove beneficial in 1952 rather than as an immediate possibility. The United States is now so intricately involved in Paris and elsewhere in Europe in keeping a close watch on the billions of dollars of ERP funds being spent there that, in the preliminary consideration given to this problem by officials a few weeks ago, the time did not seem appropriate for the United States to change its role in the OEEC. Some idea of the scope of United States operations in Paris can be gained from the sheer size of the ECA staff under Harriman. There are approximately 1100 people working for ECA in Paris, including the ECA mission to that country.

2. Owing to faulty interdepartmental communications as much as to anything else, the four-power statement announced on May 18th came as a complete surprise to ECA officials in Washington. When we spoke to Bissell late on May 18th, he started off by assuring us that he knew nothing about what the press were reporting from London — he was certain, however, that the story of Canada and the United States joining the OEEC must have been an invention of the press as the result of "blowing out of its context" some reference to cooperation with the OEEC which the Foreign Ministers may well have made. The State Department officials say that they have not been able to get hold of Martin of the Treasury, so they therefore do not know what the Treasury's views are.

3. Just how the new relationship with OEEC is to be worked out is entirely the State Department's baby. Now that the baby has been born somewhat prematurely, the State Department officials are in a bit of a quandary about how to handle it and are therefore awaiting the return of those who fathered the scheme before committing themselves to a definite course of action.

4. Comment on Paragraph 3 of EX-852.

(I) The form the invitation should take. Unless there is some special reason to the contrary, our view would be that the invitation should stay fairly closely to the main lines of the four-power statement issued on May 18th. It might not be amiss if it were possible for Stikker to make some comment on the very great contribution which Canada and the United States have each made to the economic reconstruction of Europe. This might help some other countries around the world who consider that they should be invited to join this very important economic association, now that it has spread from Europe across the Atlantic, to understand why Canada has been invited to establish a special relationship with the OEEC. Although we have paid a rather substantial admission ticket, and the United States is continuing to subscribe handsomely, it is very important that the more chronic dollar invalids in Europe should avoid giving expression to what many of them are alleged to hope, namely, that with the United States and Canada in the OEEC it will be easier to arrange for dollar assistance in the post ERP period.

(II) "Right to attend all Committees". It might be advisable to have it made clear that we have the right to speak at all Committees in addition to being able to attend them.

(III) "Right to attend Executive Committee and Council when they have special interests". We should, of course, have this right, particularly in the Executive Committee of Ministers which now meets once a month under the chairmanship of Stikker. Most of the important problems are threshed out and decisions reached in this Committee. To determine what is meant by "special interests" may be a problem. In the Washington context the words, "special interests" usually mean something a great deal less high-minded than is, of course, intended for our relationship with the OEEC. I imagine our interests will be chiefly involved when trade policies are being discussed or payments schemes hatched which, in our view, will affect the economic relationship between the North American countries on the one hand and the European on the other. From the modest size which I assume our delegation will take, as well as from our general reputation, I imagine that we should not find it necessary to make it clear that we do not intend to participate in the work of all the Committees all of the time, nor to take an active part in problems which are primarily the concern of the European countries.

(IV) A small protocol problem may arise over the question of Ministerial representation. From the beginning the United States has attached great importance to having the principal Ministers concern themselves directly and more frequently in the work of the OEEC. As you know, the Stikker appointment and the creation of an Executive Committee of Ministers reflect the extent to which the Europeans have met the wishes of the ECA and of the State Department in this respect. Mr. Harriman, who is a former member of the United States Cabinet, has the personal rank of Ambassador in his present position. There appears to be no protocol problem for Mr. Harriman, who is somewhat noted for the attention he accords to questions of rank, in associating on an equal plane with the Ministers of the European countries. Although it is a very small point, the style and title given to our representative will be of some importance.

5. The Executive Committee of the Council, until recently, used to meet at the official level under the chairmanship of [Sir Edmund Leo] Hall-Patch, the United Kingdom delegate to the OEEC. This Committee now consists of the following seven countries: The United Kingdom, Belgium, Denmark, France, Germany, Ireland and Italy. At the last meeting of the Council of the OEEC it was decided that the Executive Committee should meet once a month at the Ministerial level with Dr. Stikker the chairman of the Council in attendance. To differentiate it from the other Committee, this new group meeting at Ministerial level is customarily referred to as the Committee of Eight. Presumably the main points in our association with this important Committee as well as with the other Committees of the OEEC can best be worked out by our representative after he arrives in Paris.

Council on June 23rd approved the association of Canada and the United States in very general terms along line previously discussed (all documents to be supplied, invitations to be extended to all Committees and to all Council and Executive Committee meetings except those of no interest to Canada and the United States such as meetings on administrative questions). Everything has been left open and as the Executive Committee reported "it would not be useful to try to define in any precise terms the scope of the new association. A wide interpretation of the original French-United Kingdom proposal is likely to lead to the most fruitful results". Our association can therefore take whatever form we regard as most useful.

2. Secretariat are anxious that we participate in the next meeting of the Council at Ministerial level on July 6th. Not all countries send Cabinet Minister and we were assured that Pierce or an Embassy representative would be most acceptable. United States will be represented. We said that while it was obviously desirable to bring in a Canadian representative as soon as possible, July 6th might nevertheless be too early to allow the Canadian authorities to consider sufficiently what lines they would follow and be ready to make a statement. We have thus indicted that a further delay may be necessary.

3. Our own view is that, for reasons of public relations and to indicate our interest in the new association, a Canadian representative should attend on July 6th. Even if no very explicit statement can be made of how Canada intends to fit into the new association it should be possible to reply to the welcome that will be extended and emphasize the importance attached by the Canadian Government to a new development of great promise.

CONFIDENTIAL Paris, July 8, 1950

Dear Mr. Heeney,

I spent the first part of the week I have been in Paris exploring the implications of our new relationship. Since I expect to be back in Ottawa on the 18th I won't report now except to say that everything I have seen indicates that we will need a sizeable delegation, if we are, as we have said, to participate actively in any way that will make a useful contribution. The last two days and nights have been spent attending the Council meetings of O.E.E.C. The Payments Union was approved yesterday but only after a rather desperate two-day struggle on the question of non-discrimination in the liberalization of trade. Difficulties arose with the Swiss and the Dutch. The Swiss have liberalized about 85 percent of their trade. They wanted to use what bargaining power they had left to protect the position of their exports particularly watches which are especially vulnerable in the selection of commodities upon which quantitative restrictions are applied.

The Dutch as a comparatively low tariff country are worried first that they will not get the benefits of liberalization and because of the high tariffs which will then become effective particularly in France and Italy. They are also worried about discrimination in other forms such as special taxes and in state trading. As you will see from the final documents provision was made to grant relief but the principle of non-discrimination was retained. The United States and the United Kingdom were insistent upon its retention but they only gained the day after a severe struggle.

What is disturbing the Dutch and most other countries is that they see American aid coming to an end and defence expenditures rising. Most of them have either allowed consumption to rise to improve their domestic standards of living or have embarked on an ambitious investment program. These standards and programs are threatened and in the face of the threat they hesitated to abandon any safeguard that was available to them. However E.P.U. and the commercial rules associated with it had been adopted and I would agree with Cripps' comment that it was remarkable for the 18 members to arrive at a unanimous agreement and that it was a tribute as he said to the spirit of international democracy that rules in these countries today. He emphasized very strongly the importance of not stretching unduly the provisions designed to grant relief. If these were used for evasion the whole system became inoperable. Every country had made sacrifices and every country was making a contribution of risk but they made them aware of the great international importance of showing the strength and inventiveness of democratic regimes. Incidentally Sir Stafford Cripps seemed well and in the best of spirits as befits one who has perhaps shed the cares of the poor and not yet shouldered the troubles of the rich.

The United States and Canada were welcomed by the Chairman, Mr. Stikker. Ambassador Katz announced the formal acceptance by the United States. Our acceptance had already been received so I had only to refer to it. I made it clear we had not yet named our representative and that my present assignment was to explore the implications of the new association and report to Ottawa. (Nevertheless the London Times, less conservative than usual, referred to me as the newly appointed Canadian representative.)

I then — using the language of the Prime Minister's statement in the House and of our press release,[35] expressed our desire to participate actively in any way that would usefully contribute to the development of the organization as an agency for economic co-operation between countries of Western Europe and North America and for the solution of common problems.

Yours sincerely,
SYDNEY PIERCE

Dear Mr. Heeney,

O.E.E.C.-UK-US RELATIONS

On this visit to Paris I have been forcibly struck with the remarkable improvement in relations between the United Kingdom and the United States which has occurred since I was here two years ago. Then the Americans were openly accusing the British of being obstructionists, of opposing any attempt at European integration and having no disposition to take part in it. Personal relations too between the E.C.A. people and the United Kingdom delegation were certainly not good at the top level and only fair beneath. The situation is completely changed. The Americans have nothing but praise, first for the British readiness to accept any well-thought out practical proposal even if it ran counter to their previously held views, and secondly by the reliability of the British who when they agree to do anything do it. Further they have come to believe that there is not such a great difference between the British and United States general approach despite the labels of socialism and free enterprise which they carry. They have been led to change their mind notably by the British attitude on E.P.U. but also by their day-to-day operations.

See Canada, House of Commons Debates, 1950, Volume III, pp. 2621-2622, and Canada, Department of External Affairs, Communiqués, 1950, No. 45.

Conversations of Gaitskell and Katz held in connection mainly with E.P.U. have been helpful in making them both realize that the difference between the two general approaches was not as great as they had thought.

The Americans say that they think the real hope for European recovery and general stability lies in strengthening the British position. Insofar as E.C.A. officials here are concerned they will be strong advocates at Washington for anything that does help the British solve their problems. Once this is done they feel that the solution of the European problems will be comparatively simple. Henry Tasca who is Head of the Financial Division thinks that the most useful step that could be taken is to find ways that could make sterling convertible. Other countries could then follow and a train of fruitful development would ensue. He welcomes the increase of British reserves and thought they should go much higher. He recognized of course the political problems. E.C.A. might indeed be blamed for having succeeding in what the E.C.A. regards as one of its most important tasks. He is turning over the possibility of the United States dropping out of tramp shipping and of doing defence buying in the United Kingdom and of course maintain their drive to facilitate imports. If the O.E.E.C. operation has done nothing more, and I feel it has, it appears to me to have been of tremendous value in bringing the United States and the United Kingdom closer together. The improvement is so great that I find some E.C.A. officials feel that the United Kingdom is the only country in the O.E.E.C. on both whose intentions and performance they can rely.

Yours sincerely,

SYDNEY PIERCE

CONFIDENTIAL Paris, July 8, 1950

Dear Mr. Heeney,

PLANS

A country's representative at O.E.E.C. is next to naked these days without a plan.

In addition to the Schuman plan, so supra-national that it has not been brought to O.E.E.C., there now are the Stikker plan (the sector by sector approach) the Pella or Italian plan (the general approach through creation of a European preferential system) and the Petsche or French plan for the creation of a European Investment Bank.

The Council yesterday agreed to pass the plans to the Executive Committee and let it decide how to deal with them.

You have the Stikker and Pella plans. A new working document on the former will reach you shortly. You will be receiving copies of the Petsche plan from the Embassy but in the meantime here are two copies.

The plans are complex, technical and raise broad political issues. The Stikker and Pella plans, like the Schuman, raise the issue of discrimination. It is probable that the Executive Committee will seek an amalgam of all the plans. We should certainly endeavour to get our policy clear in Ottawa as to our attitude on these proposals. There are so many plans now under study that I would think that progress here would be slow (There will be an opportunity, and this is the time, to work for our point of view so that the sooner we can develop our policy the better it will be).[36] You might think it advisable to start a group working on this as soon as you receive the documents.

Sir Stafford Cripps stated the British position quite clearly yesterday. He said the United Kingdom attitude was the same as it was last November. It could not integrate with Europe in any way that would prejudice the full discharge of the United Kingdom's other responsibilities. Their policy rested on the Convention of the O.E.E.C. They would study any proposed association consistent with the above policy. The United Kingdom trade interest was for the development of world trade. Cripps pointed out that the United Kingdom had not objected in principle to the Schuman plan but that they considered it important to consult with G.A.T.T. and I.T.O. Dealing with the question of reducing tariffs he said it was important to reduce tariffs on the other side of the Atlantic as well as on this side. That we must take great pains to make narrow European economic co-operation no brake on wider world co-operation. He went on to urge some caution in entering new engagements, that we should wait till we learn the effects of liberalization and the operation of E.P.U. We must not go too quickly on paper but we should proceed with practical measures and try out their effect before entering into new arrangements.

Stikker spoke about his plan; he made it clear that his original proposal was not engraved on tablets of stone. New considerations had arisen which must be taken into account together with the reactions of the delegations. The plan's purpose was merely to give guidance. He did not expect it to be either accepted or rejected in its entirety. He was looking for a clear simple plan of action; such a plan was needed. United States aid would be reduced, military expenditures expanded and the demands for higher wages were threatening the stability between wages and prices. In the face of this Europe must co-ordinate and balance its accounts with the rest of the world. They should not do this by incidental measures. His plan endeavoured to indicate the direction and also to cushion the shocks and so avoid incidental measures. The objective was European integration and a large European market which would lead to higher standards of living and to the closing of the dollar gap. Anything that was being done in Europe he said must be a stepping stone to liberalization of world trade which alone can bring back prosperity to all our countries. He made special reference to agriculture and a proposal that we must be prepared to consider in this field. The ideal was a completely free market but the possibility of obtaining it was remote. Something must be done however lest there develop eighteen different forms of dirigisme. He suggested calling a conference of Ministers of Agriculture in the near future.

Good idea [A.D.P. Heeney].

Pella spoke. He said questions had been raised in connection with his plan, whether the creation of a preferential plan in Europe was compatible with non-discrimination. He said the choice was not between discrimination and non-discrimination but between the actual forms existing under bilateral quantitative restriction and between European co-operation leading to a reduction of prices with no other protection but the tariff. The choice was between what he called a plurality of European markets, quantitative restrictions, and not closing the dollar gap, and a plurality of European markets capable of organizing its relations solely on a customs tariff basis as does the United States.

The next meeting of the Council will probably be in September at a date not yet fixed.

Your sincerely,
SYDNEY PIERCE

APPOINTMENT OF CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE TO THE ORGANIZATION FOR EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COOPERATION

5. The Secretary of State for External Affairs recalled that it had been agreed that Canada and the United States should be associated with the Organization for European Economic Cooperation. It is now recommended that Canada should adopt the same procedure as the other countries concerned and appoint a special representative to O.E.E.C. with the rank, status and salary of the head of a diplomatic mission. Mr. Pierce, at present Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, was recommended for the position.

6. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the Appointment of Sydney D. Pierce, Esquire, as Canadian representative to the Organization for European Economic Cooperation with the rank of Ambassador; to be paid at the rate of $10,000 a year plus diplomatic allowances; an Order in Council to be passed accordingly.

SECRET Paris, October 14, 1950

Dear Mr. Heeney:

RE 110TH MEETING OF THE O.E.E.C. COUNCIL
PARIS, OCTOBER 6 AND 7, 1950

I have summarized in my letter of October 13th† the action taken at the meeting. This letter deals with what appear to us to have been some of the main issues.

The first is the question of the role of O.E.E.C. on the economic aspects of defence. On the eve of the meeting, this was considered to be one of the most contentious issues. On the one hand there was the attitude the French had adopted in the New York NATO meetings to leave such questions to the deputies in London, and the United Kingdom had supported it. On the other hand, there was the view most strongly expressed here by the Swiss, and held to some degree by almost all the other members, including Sweden, that if the O.E.E.C. were to evade this question, the Organization was finished as an effective medium for European cooperation. The Swiss pointed out in private discussions that in matters of European defence, their own strength and their own expenditures were a most important element not taken into account in NATO. Indeed, with 19 divisions available, they felt they could be in Paris in 72 hours. They made it clear that they did not intend to become an island in a Russian sea.

Before the meeting it was known that the French would back away from their extreme stand in New York. This was held to be due largely to the influence of Petsche, the Minister of Finance. He is reported to have said that he, a Minister, did not intend to take orders from Alphand in London.

There was evidence that this question had created a rift in many cabinets. The military has apparently moved ahead of the financial authorities, and there had been a lack of co-ordination.

The United States attitude was considered to be that expressed by Bissell who had, on September 30th, spoken on a personal basis to a Working Party of the Economic Committee. In his remarks contained in Document EC/WP5(50)4,† he said that he believes the O.E.E.C. "must or should forthwith set to work to deal with many of the pressing economic problems that have either been created as problems by the expansion of military expenditures, or problems whose character has been directly altered by these political developments".

He said his feeling was "that if we, all of us within our governments and between governments, wait until we have debated out and discussed at length the form of national and international organisation that is precisely appropriate to deal with these matters, that we shall wait, and far too long, to get on with the work that needs to be done".

He also said: "I am sure, in my own mind, that it will be wrong to delay the substantive work in the hope that within another two or three weeks there may be a complete clarification of the Organisation, international and national. I think one reason for that is that until the scope of defence expenditure in all the countries here represented, and in certain countries in other parts of the world not represented here — until the scope of that expenditure is better known (which it cannot be for many months in a good many cases) no-one in the world will know, for instance, how pervasive are likely to be the shortages of raw materials that may develop in the next two or three years. Therefore, I think we must resign ourselves to the fact that international as well as national organisations will have to develop as circumstances change, and that we can not now plan our future in this area with any great certainty."

He added that the reason he was so anxious to see O.E.E.C. go ahead with the work was because of his "driving conviction" that the O.E.E.C. has developed a technical competence and that it "is clearly better equipped to get on with these jobs than is any other group of people that now exists anywhere else".

With the expected retreat of the French, the British delegation was threatened with isolation. Hall-Patch, head of the U.K. O.E.E.C. Mission used his influence to have the British change their attitude. He leaned heavily on Bissell's statement, and stressed that the U.S. attitude, with the funds they had to back it up, should be the deciding factor.

At the meeting, all passed off quietly. You will have seen that there is a non-committal reference to the role of O.E.E.C. in this field in the Council decision concerning urgent economic problems (C(50)291 Final, Oct. 7th†) in the section dealing with trade and payments. The Danes made an attempt to spell out a more definite role for O.E.E.C. and for the European Payments Union, but they were quickly hushed up, and there was no debate on the issue.

A controversial issue which arose at the Council meeting was the re-appearance of the old question of how far the U.K. are prepared to go in integration measures with Europe. It arose in discussion of the drafting of Section 3 of the Council decision, "Raw Material Shortages". The question was whether O.E.E.C. would act as a claimant agency for its members. The question was academic: there was nothing at the moment to claim. The British objected to deciding now whether O.E.E.C. would act as a claimant agency. The Irish, supported by the Danes, seized the opportunity to try to force the British to commit themselves to pooling their claims with Europe.

The fight was hot: the result, a compromise. The technical committees concerned are asked to make proposals if necessary, for the introduction of allocation systems and to suggest a course for action, or "procedures whereby the Organisation might be in a position, if appropriate, to act as claimant agency responsible for presenting the requirements of Member countries".

The Irish seem determined to raise this basic issue whenever they can. I suggested to them that little was to be gained from pressing the British when the issues were academic: British are always reluctant to commit themselves in principle; yet the record shows that they are ready to enter well thought out practical schemes, even if they involve a high degree of integration. The U.K. action on the E.P.U. was, I thought, a good example, and I suggested privately to the Irish that they hold their fire until questions assumed a practical form.

One matter, while not a main issue, that was of interest to us as Canadians, was the treatment of the section in the draft decision which the Secretary-General recommended dealing with the United States and Canada (C(50)291, Oct. 5th†). We pointed out that this section, as first drafted, placed an obligation on the United States and Canada that was not spelled out for all members. The two countries were asked to have regard for the needs of the European countries, but the latter were not charged with having the same regard for our requirements. It appeared to us that the clause should be generalized. In addition, we pointed out that the second section of the same paragraph, which called upon the United States and Canada to maintain delivery dates for European countries really amounted in practice to asking us to give European requirements a preferred position. Under a system of priorities and allocations, delivery dates shift to permit the most urgent requirements to be met, and to ask that delivery dates be maintained was a request for more than equitable treatment.

The result was that the decision in its final form was generalized, and Section 2 dropped. The final wording is: "The Council recommends: The countries participating in the work of the Organisation should, in their demand for scarce materials and equipment, and in the administration of export controls over these items, have due regard to their mutual requirements and their common interests and objectives." (Para. 19, Council Decision Concerning Urgent Economic Problems — C(50)291 (Final)).

Yours sincerely,
SYDNEY PIERCE

O.E.E.C. GENERAL

In my letter of October 26, I wrote of the atmosphere at the Council Meeting at the ministerial level of October 6. I said I felt that the obstacles to progress had gained and the cooperative objective had lost in stature. I added that a more constructive note had been evident in the Committee discussions that followed the Council meeting.

2. The improved tone was maintained at the last Council meeting at ministerial level of October 26, and I feel the balance has been to some measure redressed.

3. The action taken at the meeting reported in our telegram No. 13 of October 28,† shows that the principle of liberalization in intra-European trade was maintained and the way left open for further progress in this direction.

4. Qualified though the decisions to proceed with liberalization are, they were nevertheless reached only with considerable difficulty. The original instructions which Stikker had from the Netherlands Government on the issues of reduction in the disparity of tariff levels and of Netherlands-German trade would not have permitted the Council to reach its decision: but Stikker sought and obtained a modification of his instructions.

5. While the way is left open for further progress in the field of liberalization, several countries do not expect that they will be able to attain the 75% level by the first part of 1951, if indeed at all. The Dutch, the Danes and the Turks said so clearly and others might have if the point had not been made and escape clauses provided for them.

6. Really serious obstacles to further progress in this and other fields of European cooperation are the high French and Italian tariffs. The present attitude of the French in O.E.E.C. seems to me designed to erect a series of defences around their tariff. They call upon the Organization to deal "satisfactorily" with the problems of raw materials and the impact of defence and have made their acceptance of the next stage of liberalization conditional upon their receiving satisfaction. They call on the O.E.E.C. to adopt the Petsche Plan for a European Investment Bank. They refer to the key role in European integration of the Schuman Plan. They imply all must go abreast. I expect any day now they will require that the Pleven Plan be added to the formation.[37]

7. At any rate, O.E.E.C. still has way and the crew's still hard at work, even if some of them are wearing water-wings under their dungarees.

STIKKER, PETSCHE AND PELLA PLANS

1. The draft paper on the Stikker, Petsche and Pella Plans which was enclosed with our letter No. E-142 of November 28th† has now been discussed with other Departments and revised in a few details of minor importance. A copy of the final paper is enclosed.

2. You will, of course, be as aware as we are that the turn of events in Korea, the economic consequences of urgent rearmament, and the scarcity of some essential raw materials have created a situation quite different from that in which these proposals for European integration were conceived. They were designed and proposed for an era of peace and relative stability to provide offsets for unemployment and dislocation consequent to the gradual establishment of a single market area in Europe. That perspective no longer exists. Instead, a path of quick rearmament lies ahead, beset by scarcities of raw materials, warnings of inflation and the reimposition of wartime controls. In this new situation the present plans for European integration are academic. A modified version of the Petsche plan tempered to the requirements of rearmament as well as to the ideals of world integration might, however, be worth considering in the new situation. Your thoughts on this subject would be appreciated.

3. The impact of rearmament on the three plans was discussed with Hall-Patch and Marjolin when they were in Ottawa December 18th. They had obviously not had time to think the matter out but they were agreed on two points:

(a) If the economies of OEEC countries were caught up in an inflation even the present stage of liberalization might have to be abolished.

(b) The more urgent problems of providing sufficient essential raw materials to keep European industry producing, the economic problems of rearmament and the working out of a modus vivendi or amalgamation with NATO would occupy the full attention of OEEC for some time. An account of the discussions of these problems are set out in another despatch.

4. Although there are more pressing problems facing OEEC than that of the integration of the European economy, and although the SPP plans are not likely to receive much further attention at the moment, integration is important in a rearming as well as in a peaceful world; it would improve the efficiency of the economic basis of military power. Both Marjolin and Hall-Patch agreed that this was so, but they had obviously given no thought to the manner in which integration might be accomplished in a rearming and inflating Europe. We suggested that integration might be easier during a period of inflation than during a slack period.

5. It is recognized that the enclosed paper is partly out of date. However, it would not be useful to revise it at the moment until more urgent matters have been decided.

Memorandum

THE STIKKER, PETSCHE AND PELLA PLANS FOR EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

Three plans for integrating the economies of the Western Europe countries are now under consideration in OEEC: The Netherlands "Stikker" Plan, the French "Petsche" Plan and the Italian "Pella" Plan. All have the common objectives of raising European production and standard of living, balancing payments and promoting full employment. In addition, there is common agreement that the accomplishment of a single market area in Western Europe and the redistribution of industry from high cost to low cost areas. The three plans envisage a progressive removal of trade barriers, both quantitative and tariff, and are focused on the liberalization of 75% of all intra OEEC trade on private account by December 30, 1950.

None of the so-called plans is a detailed blue print for action; they are proposals, and their terms may vary as they are considered. They are not mutually exclusive and it is possible that a final and acceptable plan for European integration will contain elements of all three proposals.

The "Stikker" proposal emphasizes the joint responsibility of all the participating countries for sharing the burden of readjustment in any one country which is made necessary by the removal of restrictions. Stikker maintains that the "common advantages of integration can be achieved only if the burdens are commonly shared". Hence, his plan envisages a European integration fund, to which all participating countries would contribute. The resources of the fund would be used to make loans to participating Governments to counteract the repercussions of trade liberalization. The manner in which the fund would operate has not been fully worked out, but the emphasis is on the need to counteract the short term disequilibria in the transitional period and to spread the cost of remedial investments over all the participating countries in relation to their contributions to the fund.

The Petsche Plan calls for the establishment of a European Investment Bank with more positive aims. It would attract private capital and invest in projects which would yield a commercial return in a freed European market and which would be competitive on world markets. The Bank would lend either to private or public enterprises which served to increase the competitive power of European production in world markets. It would assist in financing industries which were economic only on a European as opposed to a national scale.

The scope of the Petsche plan is thus different from that of the Stikker plan although in practice the two might overlap. Whereas the Stikker plan is primarily an attempt to solve the political problem of sharing the burden of liberalization by granting loans to governments to counteract dislocation of industry rendered uneconomic by the reduction of trade barriers, the Petsche plan envisages what amounts to a European Investment Syndicate whose object is to direct investment funds into the most economic projects regardless of national boundaries. As for overlapping, it is probable that funds lent to governments by the Stikker "fund" to counteract the decline of uneconomic industries would be invested in projects that would be approved by the Petsche Bank; but this would not necessarily be so as the final decision on the use of Stikker money would be decided on a national basis.

The Pella Plan is of a different nature. It assumes that the immediate removal of all European tariffs is a practical impossibility and that a "simultaneous, progressive reduction of European tariffs is possible only if participating countries are not compelled to extend the reductions in favour of OEEC countries to all other countries". The Pella Plan thus envisages the formation of a Western European Preference Area. Within it tariff reductions would be negotiated on a m.f.n. basis; it would be a little GATT inside the existing GATT.

Like the Stikker plan, the Pella plan provides a mechanism for sharing equitably the burden of trade liberalization. Equal percentage reductions in tariffs in different countries may cause quite different degrees of industry dislocation and unemployment in those countries. Pella would maintain that it is these burdens which must be equally shared. Therefore, some countries with rigid economies must be allowed to keep their intra-European tariff at a higher level than other countries whose economies are more flexible. It is not surprising that Italy, with one of the highest tariff levels and with one of the most rigid economies in Europe, should propose a plan which might enable her to maintain relatively higher rates than other countries.

The Pella Plan envisages a progressive reduction of tariffs within the Preferential Area which would both provide an incentive for reducing production costs and give time for industries to adapt themselves to new competitive situations.

The Pella proposals are obviously contrary to the main provisions and purposes of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. However, under a general escape clause, a two-thirds majority of the Contracting Parties can waive any obligations, so that the Plan could be carried out by the OEEC countries if enough outside countries agreed.

GENERAL CANADIAN POLICY ON EUROPEAN INTEGRATION

The Canadian interest in European integration is broadly based. We have a strong political and strategic interest in establishing a united political and military front. On the other hand, our political and military interest extends to the whole North Atlantic area and beyond, and our interest in European integration must be viewed against this wider background.

From an economic point of view it is in our general interest for European countries to improve their economic efficiency. The reduction of obstacles to specialization and trade between themselves even on a limited, discriminating basis will in many cases promote efficiency. It must be remembered, however, that general, non-discriminating reductions will provide an even greater spur to efficiency. Further, some reductions of barriers within Europe will lead toward general reductions; others will lead toward a permanently protected European market. Hence we cannot be "for" or "against" them in general.

It is certain that a rationalization of European industry cannot be accomplished in isolation. Some adjustments outside Europe are inevitable. Accordingly, if the long term aim is worthwhile, our interest lies in ensuring that the re-adjustments in Canada take place at a time when our economy is as buoyant and flexible as it now is. The stringent restrictions imposed in recent years against imports into Europe have fortunately caused little real hardship in Canada. We have developed other markets for our industries or new industries for new markets.

There would not seem to be any reason to change the general approach we have adopted toward economic integration plans for Europe in the past few years. The facets of that approach are as follows:

(1) In general make no objection to reasonable proposals for European integration, i.e. proposals which conduce to an ever widening area of multilateral trade.

(2) Try to ensure that Europeans do not undertake plans which will worsen their economic position — and hence their military and political position — in the long run.

(3) When a sector of Canadian industry (particularly a relatively rigid sector) will be harmed excessively by a particular restriction, make sure our situation is brought to the attention of the policy makers, and, if our case relative to theirs is a good one, make the strongest representations to have the restriction removed or ameliorated.

The Stikker, Petsche and Pella proposals may be considered in the light of the foregoing.

The Stikker Plan

The Integration Fund proposed by Mr. Stikker is basically a compensatory arrangement. It does not introduce any new device which would affect Canadian interest; Canada, presumably, would not be expected to participate. In essence it is a device for bringing about more quickly 75% and later the 100% liberation of European trade. The OEEC has been following this course for some time now and Canada has neither tendered serious objection to it nor suffered unduly from it.

The Stikker plan is intended to spread the burden of integration on an equitable basis between European countries. The principle of offering loans in exchange for reduction in quantitative and tariff restrictions is a new one and it may present numerous administrative difficulties to the OEEC countries. There is no reason for Canada to oppose it within Europe. On the other hand, the principle of cash compensation for tariff and quota reductions is one which we probably would not wish to see extended outside — for example, in GATT.

The Canadian policy toward the Stikker Plan, if it is adopted by the OEEC, might be —

(1) to watch closely the improvement in the dollar reserves of participating countries and, from time to time, press for such removal of quantitative restrictions on a multilateral basis as the reserve position would permit.

(2) To watch closely the course of European investment and to make strong representations if Stikker loans are used to promote European industries whose costs are high relative to similar industries in North America or elsewhere.

The Petsche Plan

The Petsche Bank is a more positive device for directing investment into economic channels than the Stikker Fund. Its principle of financing only those projects which would be competitive on a world-wide basis is particularly acceptable to Canada.

It is suggested that Canada should favour in principle the Petsche Plan while recognizing that it does not tackle directly the current burden sharing problems connected with trade liberalization.

The relationship between the Petsche Bank and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development is not yet clear. The proponents of the European bank tend to magnify the differences between them. Basically they have the same objectives, although they differ in some matters of principle and technique. I.B.R.D. may grant loans only to governments or to private interests under government guarantee; the Petsche Bank would lend directly to private or public undertakings. The Petsche Bank would only assist projects in which there was considerable participation by private capital.

It is conceivable that the two bodies might participate in assisting the financing of the same enterprise. The World Bank could make a loan to an enterprise which was also receiving EIB assistance, provided there was an appropriate government guarantee of the World Bank loan and the other usual conditions for IBRD financing were present.

Up to now the relationship between IBRD and the EIB has been discussed on a technical basis. When they are discussed in Council it is certain that political considerations will predominate. The OEEC are unlikely to favour co-operation with IBRD which will give that agency a final or even an important voice in allocation of European investment funds although they will do everything they can to attract IBRD capital.

Canada has no direct interest in this jurisdictional discussion. Both Banks have principles which we favour. It is not possible to formulate a final Canadian position until a definite plan is proposed and until the attitudes of the OEEC countries and the Bank are made known. In general we might favour:

(1) Encouraging a close relationship between the EIB and IBRD in order to emphasize and strengthen multilateral objectives. This might take the form of IBRD participation on EIB's governing body in order to help maintain multilateral principles in the face of regional political and economic interests. (It is not certain, of course, that IBRD would wish to be a participant on EIB's governing body.)

(2) Leaving a considerable degree of independence and discretion to the EIB in the channelling of European investment.

The Pella Plan

The Pella Plan presents greater obstacles to Canadian agreement as it runs counter to the multilateral most-favoured-nation principles of GATT. We might tend to favour the replacement of quantitative restrictions by such devices as graduated import taxes, even if intra-European trade were to receive preferential treatment. However, there is apparently no immediate intention of abolishing quantitative restrictions on dollar imports. Consequently, it is suggested that the Canadian policy should be to oppose the adoption of the Pella proposals. Western Europe has come a very long way toward viability and increasing standard of living without destroying the multilateral m.f.n. principles in the field of tariffs. It would be most unfortunate if these principles were forsaken in the last stages of recovery in order to hasten the removal of quantitative restrictions by a year or so.

If the Pella Plan were adopted, we should make every effort to restrict its scope. If it became clear, in GATT, that a two-thirds majority might allow some sort of waiver, we should then argue against a general waiver, suggesting instead that every preferential rate be justified individually under Article XXV of the General Agreement.

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

EXPORT OF STRATEGIC MATERIALS TO IRON CURTAIN COUNTRIES

Repeat (for information only) Washington EX-3065; London No. 2242.

1. We have been approached by State Department in Washington and by United Kingdom High Commissioner here in regard to a meeting in Paris on January 9th. We have said that we would be glad to have Canadian representatives participate fully in the meeting if this is agreeable to the others. In discussing the matter State Department officials have said that they will seek the approval of the United Kingdom, France, Italy, the Netherlands, Belgium, Denmark and Norway to our participation; on the other hand the United Kingdom has indicated that they are sponsoring us jointly with the United States.

2. Throughout the war and postwar period we have worked very closely with the United States in matters of export control, whether these controls have been designed to conserve scarce materials on the North American continent, or to prevent war material and supplies from reaching possibly hostile destinations. There are no border controls between Canada and the United States; the imposition of such controls might involve serious impediments to trade; hence our controls on overseas exports must be closely in line with American controls.

3. Officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce in Washington are in frequent contact with officials in the Department of Commerce and State Department who are concerned with United States export controls. In addition policy meetings have been held from time to time and members of this Department have attended.

4. Over the past year or two the United States has been putting increasing pressure on E.R.P. countries to bring their export controls into line with United States (and Canadian) policy. This has become more necessary as wartime scarcities have disappeared; as long as strategic materials, machinery, etc., were in very short supply there was little likelihood that Western European countries would ship them to Eastern Europe.

5. At the beginning of this month the United States asked us if we would participate in an ad hoc international group to coordinate export policy to Eastern Europe. We agreed to do so. The wider the group of Western countries participating and the more fully they keep each other informed of their actions, the more effective will their joint policy be. We warned the United States, however, that while we were anxious to coordinate policies as far as possible, we could not agree to any system which would involve us in getting approvals from them or from some international body in advance of individual shipments.

6. In agreeing to participate in the ad hoc group we expected that it would meet in Washington. However, it is meeting in Paris. This is satisfactory from our point of view as long as our specially close relations with the United States (for geographical reasons) are understood by the other participants. We have emphasized this point to the United Kingdom High Commissioner here.

7. When the United States first proposed that we should join in an international group it was in connection with arrangements under the North Atlantic Treaty. We agreed with them that this was not (repeat not) desirable. It would limit the membership of the group; it would make secrecy more difficult; and if news of the arrangement leaked out, it might be used by the Eastern countries as evidence that the North Atlantic Treaty was offensive rather than defensive. The fact that meetings are to take place in Paris raises the question whether the group might become associated with O.E.E.C. We would regard this as objectionable for the reasons already given; in addition any formal association with O.E.E.C. might have wider implications for Canada which would make our continuing association with the group impossible.

8. If we had understood that meetings were to take place in Paris we should, of course, have been in touch with you earlier. We are sending by air mail copies of relevant documents.

9. We understand that the meeting, beginning on January 9th, is likely to last about a week and that six experts are going from the United States and four each from France and the United Kingdom. The Department primarily concerned here is Trade and Commerce and we trust it will be possible for Manion to attend. In addition, however, we would like to have a member of this Department closely associated with the meetings to report to us on policy matters. It is probable that Mr. Bull of the Department of Trade and Commerce, or one of his associates in Ottawa, will go to Paris for the meeting; we will give you further word on this. In any case Trade and Commerce will be briefing Manion.

DESPATCH 57 Paris, January 25, 1950

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to the consultations held in Paris from January 9th to 19th to consider the problem of controlling exports to Eastern Europe. In this connection I refer to my messages Nos. 28† and 29† of January 12th, No. 33 of January 13th,† and No. 39 of January 18.† In forwarding an account of these meetings I am reporting in some detail in order that the representatives from Ottawa who come to Paris for future meetings of this Group may have a comprehensive picture of previous negotiations.

History

2. Before reviewing the recent session, I think it would be useful to refer briefly to the previous meetings of this Group. Late in 1948 the U.K. and France held joint meetings in order to decide on a common policy as regards the U.S. request for the application of their 1A and 1B lists. It was desired to speak as one unit when dealing with the U.S., although the negotiations were in fact bilateral at that time. Hence the Anglo-French list was drawn up. Invitations were later issued to Belgium, Italy, the Netherlands, Switzerland and Sweden to join these discussions, but the latter two countries, after attending one or two meetings dropped out, preferring to implement their own programme of controls without consultation with the other countries. However, they have discussed and we understand they are still willing to discuss their arrangements with the U.S. on a bilateral basis. At the instigation of the U.K., the U.S. was invited to send observers to the October meeting. They became active members in November. At that time, Norway and Denmark also joined the Group.

The December Session

3. One of the United Kingdom representatives gave Mr. Kilgour[38] an opportunity to read their report to the Foreign Office on the December session. The following information is therefore largely based on the U.K. report. At the December meeting, the Group had as the basis for discussions, the Anglo-French list of items for complete prohibition of export to Eastern Europe. As you know, this list included many of the items on the U.S. 1A list, and a few of the items were on the U.S. 1B list. After lengthy and sometimes tense discussions, the Anglo-French list was split into three separate lists. List I was those items on which all countries agreed complete prohibition was desirable. List II included any items on which quantitative controls were considered sufficient. List III included the remaining items on which agreement had not yet been reached. Various reasons were offered why certain items should not be included in List I. The Belgians, on the plea that some items were of considerable significance to their economy, suggested that the other countries participating in these discussions might be prepared to buy the surplus they would normally export to Eastern Europe. The Dutch, on the grounds that some items were important bargaining points in their trade negotiations with Eastern European countries, similarly wanted some items left free. The French suggested that certain items should not be included, for in exporting them to Eastern Europe they always obtained, they said, a suitable quid pro quo. To all these observations, the other participants gave no sympathy. Some items were tentatively placed in list III simply owing to the need for a clarification of the nomenclature. At Appendix I,† you will find the report on lists adopted at the December session.

4. On the question of Transit Trade, the U.S. proposal (Appendix II†) was used as the basis for the Committee's Report (Appendix III†). This document is self explanatory. On Trade Agreements, the Group recognized that existing trade agreements must be fulfilled but recommended that in future trade agreements with Eastern European countries no obligations should be taken to supply security items included in the agreed prohibited lists. The text of the Report is attached at Appendix IV.† As regards the future constitution and work of the Study Group, a Report (Appendix V†) was adopted which envisaged the creation of a small Secretariat. Largely owing to objections from the Netherlands, this proposal was modified at the recent session.

The January Session — The Problem of a Secretariat

5. When the plenary Group met on January 9th, the principal problem that arose concerned the reservations of the Netherlands about a Secretariat and the obstacle which this problem placed in the way of their participation in the Group (see Appendix VI† for the text of the Netherlands' statement). It will be noted that the Netherlands Delegate stated his Government would not participate in the Group if it were to become an official or semi-official international body with a Secretariat and frequent meetings. After a prolonged discussion during which many of the representatives sought to ease the Netherlands' fears, it was decided that a working committee should immediately consider the question of a Secretariat and estimate how much work might devolve on a central organisation in view of the tasks which the Group would be taking into hand. At the same time the Netherlands Delegate returned to The Hague to consult his Government. The subsequent developments in this connection have been comprehensively reported to you in the messages sent during the session. The text of the Working Committee report on the problem of a Secretariat was repeated in Telegram No. 33 and is attached at Appendix VII.† At the meeting of Heads of Delegations on January 18th, the Netherlands Delegate made a formal statement clarifying his Government's position. He again declared his Government was anxious to co-operate as far as possible, but stated that it objected to any attempt to form a permanent organisation on a multilateral basis or to arrive at a multilateral agreement. He said, unofficially, that his Government feared that if a Secretariat was formed, it would commence additional studies and be liable to push the participants further than they were prepared to go. In view of the fact the term "strategic exports" had not been defined, the possible result was that it would be interpreted as in wartime with even food prohibited. He suggested that if the people of the Eastern European countries became aware of such efforts they might indeed suspect the West. He also declared that his Government must always be in a position to be able to truthfully deny to the press or to Parliament that the Netherlands belong to any organisation the purpose of which is an economic blockade of Eastern Europe. To these observations of the Netherlands Delegate, representatives of all the participating countries declared that they were in entire agreement. In the course of the session, Mr. Manion also declared that we would be happy to participate only so long as the organisation remained on its present informal basis. The report of the Working Committee has not yet been accepted by all Governments but there is every indication that they will do so. At the final meeting of the Heads of Delegations, on January 20th, Mr. Manion informed the Chairman, in accordance with the instructions in your message No.

29 of January 18th,† that the Canadian Government accepted the report. You may have been concerned lest our participation in this Group bring further obligations upon us. I do not think any tendencies of this nature should arise owing to the type of continuing organisation which has been arranged. You will note that where secretarial assistance is required the chairman will simply call on local personnel.

Lists

6. In the examination of the three lists drawn up at the [December] session, six items were transferred from List III to List I and two items were transferred from List III to List II. As regards the U.S. additional 35 items from their List 1A, twelve items were placed on List I, one item was placed on List II, and the remaining items were placed on List III, (see Appendix VII for report of the Working Committee on the Lists†). There was some discussion by the Heads of Delegations on how List III should now be processed. It was agreed that as the present report represented the maximum agreement that could be reached at the technical level at the present time, the various representatives should refer the report to their respective capitals recommending the adoption of Lists I and II, and that the various items on List III receive appropriate study. In this regard, you will note that some items will require a Governmental decision, and that other items at present require only consultation with other technical experts. Two countries, the Netherlands and Denmark, were unable to agree with the decision to recommend the adoption of Lists I and II to their Governments. The Netherlands Delegate pointed out that as he had had no opportunity to attend the meeting of the Working Committee when the lists were studied, he could only ask his Government to consider the Group's conclusions. He therefore reserved his position on the items included in Lists I and II. The U.S. Delegation asked for expeditious consideration. The Danish Delegate's position is outlined in Annex C to Appendix VII.† After some discussion, during which the U.S. Delegate said he was confident that the Danish Government would make its present administrative control equally effective, the Group agreed to wait and see if the system to be followed in Denmark was sufficient. If at a later date, it is deemed necessary for Denmark to revise its system, the Group has reserved the right to request the Danes to do so. During this discussion the U.K. Delegate said that his Government did not concur with the Danish system and that his Government was prepared to adopt the additional items on Lists I and II only if all the other participating countries did so. However, he subsequently agreed to recommend the new additions to his Government in spite of the present position of the Danes. As far as future work on these lists is concerned, I do not consider any action need be taken in Ottawa. Mr. Manion pointed out to the Group that we already apply U.S. Lists 1A and 1B. The technical problem of definition which arises in the case of some of the items on List III I think can be left for the Europeans and the U.S. to solve.

Admission of Western Germany

7. On the question of the participation of the Western German Government, all the participants agreed that if these efforts to deny strategic items to Eastern Europe were to be successful, it was essential that Western Germany join the Group. The Allied High Commission is aware of these Paris discussions and has in fact advised the Group that it will be glad to pass an invitation to the Western German Government. Any German Delegation will, however, include a representative of the Allied High Commission who will deal with any subjects outside the competence of the Western German Government. Arrangements are now in hand for the invitation to be issued and it is anticipated that the Germans will attend the next session (see Record of Discussion in Appendix X†).

Application of Policies to Other Countries

8. As regards Yugoslavia, the U.S. representative informed the Group that his country treated Yugoslavia on different basis from the other countries of Eastern Europe. He declared that some items on Lists I and II, though not many, and some items on the U.S. 1B List, had been approved for export. The criteria of selection was roughly whether the commodity would contribute to an improvement of Yugoslavia's general economic position. He said that some items on their Munitions List might also be approved (i.e. aircraft parts). In order to provide the Group with a more suitable guide on what exports were likely to be approved, the U.S. Delegate undertook to submit to a future meeting of the Coordinating Committee a paper on this question. It is to outline specific instances where approval has been given, and some general comments on the criteria used. Although this question will therefore be studied within the Coordinating Committee, the U.S. representative recommended that no export of munitions should be approved without prior consultation; and that in the case of items on List I, the participating countries should merely inform their colleagues after export had taken place. (See Appendix X†).

9. On exports to Austria, the U.S. Delegate declared they had no restrictions but that an elaborate screening process was applied. The Group recognised that there were virtually no means to control the problem of trans-shipment within Austria and that it was undesirable to export any controlled item to this country. As regards Finland, it was agreed that a policy similar to whatever should be applied to Yugoslavia was desirable (see Appendix X†). After the U.K. and U.S. declared they were not in a position to consider any proposals concerning China at the present session, no further discussion took place on this subject.

Transit Trade

10. The problem of Transit Trade, (as well as the problem of the remaining items on List III), may cause difficulties at future meetings. The report on Transit Trade is attached at Appendix IX.† You will note that two systems of control were proposed, one by the U.S. and the other by the Belgians. (These are annexed to the report on Transit Trade). Although no Delegate observed that the U.S. system would not obtain the desired objective, most of the Europeans considered that the U.S. system, if implemented in their country, would cause "serious administrative difficulties and a disproportionate hinderance to trade". The two systems are therefore to be studied in each capital and will likely be discussed at the next session. I feel you will consider the Belgian proposal to be inadequate. The Belgian proposal is unsatisfactory also as it would involve additional duties for the Secretariat. The Canadian Delegation pointed out that this system, while perhaps bringing evaders to light, did not in fact put a stop to undesirable transit trade. You may wish to consider whether it is desirable for us to take a stronger position in this matter when it is again discussed.

General Comments

11. Throughout the session our Delegation kept in close touch with the U.S. Delegation in particular with Mr. Willis Armstrong. The Head of their Delegation was Mr. J.M. McDaniel, of E.C.A. (Washington). The problem of East-West trade is considered essentially to be a State Department problem and Mr. [Stanley M.] Cleveland of the U.S. Embassy informed us that his Embassy was in the process of taking over this work from E.C.A. (Paris). However it seems likely that the European countries will continue to handle this work through their O.E.E.C. personnel. At Appendix XI† is a list of personnel of the participating countries who attended the opening plenary meeting. The additional people who attended the technical meetings are not included. A number of the senior representatives are alternate delegates of their country on the O.E.E.C. Council. M. Hervé Alphand acted as Chairman at the Plenary Session on January 9th and at the meetings of Heads of Delegations. Particular mention should be made of the Italian Representative, M. D'Orlandi. He was Chairman of all technical meetings. Fluent in French and English and able to keep discussion on the right track, he was an impressive Chairman. Fortunately he is to be Chairman of the newly created Coordinating Committee. Throughout the session there seemed to be an amicable spirit. Our Delegation considers the U.S. representatives to have been broad-minded, and to have dealt with the European Delegations in a sympathetic way. The U.S. seem to take the attitude that this work is only just beginning and that it is important it should develop with as much cooperation as possible.

12. As regards future work, the U.S. 1B List will, as you anticipated, likely come up for discussion at the next session. In this connection, the U.S. distributed a paper on their proposals (Appendix XII†). The Department of Trade and Commerce will no doubt find this paper of considerable use in preparing for the next session. No date, however, has been mentioned when this meeting, or a meeting of the Coordinating Committee, may take place. I shall keep you informed as meetings of the Coordinating Committee occur.

13. Additional copies of all the Appendices are attached to the second copy of this Report. Mr. Manion has asked that this set of documents, together with the report, be forwarded to the Department of Trade and Commerce.

I have, etc.

Reference Paris meetings on control of exports to Eastern Europe.

1. [Robert] Wright, of the Economic Resources and Security Branch of the State Department in a conversation with Towe yesterday, said that the United States is now giving further consideration to their proposals for quantitative control of exports which were tabled in the January meetings of the Paris group. Under the original United States proposals the international list 2 (items for quantitative control) was to be divided into three categories:

(1) Items which would call for prior consultation in the Paris group. Items in this category would in reality be subject to complete prohibition unless a strong case could be made for a specific shipment on economic grounds.

(2) Items for which firm quotas would be established. The United States proposed that the quota established should represent a 50 percent cutback in the average annual shipments made for the period 1947-1949.

(3) Items of less strategic significance for which a post facto exchange of statistics would be required.

2. A number of European countries, and in particular the United Kingdom and France, have apparently taken strong exception to the United States proposals for quantitative control of certain strategic exports. It is claimed that the application of such proposals would be tantamount to full scale economic warfare with Eastern Europe, would completely disrupt East-West European trade approved on economic grounds and thus jeopardize economic recovery. Recent State Department studies (to be used for their guidance only) have apparently demonstrated that French and British claims are not without foundation. It is estimated that over the period 1947-1949 approximately one-third of Western European exports to Eastern Europe has consisted of the United States 1B items. A 50 percent cutback would represent a serious economic loss for many of the Western European countries.

3. Opinion in the various United States Government agencies on the original United States proposals for quantitative control is by no means unanimous. The Economic Cooperation Administration, convinced that strict quantitative control would have a serious adverse effect on economic recovery, believe that the Paris group should content itself, at least for the present, with an exchange of statistics on 1B shipments. On the other hand, Western Europe's reluctance (and particularly the unwillingness of the United Kingdom) to introduce stricter quantitative controls has caused the United States Department of Commerce considerable embarrassment. The Commerce Department here has been subjected to no small amount of criticism from United States exporters who are aware that shipments of items they are prohibited from exporting, are being made from Western European countries. Moreover, the Department of Commerce itself is apparently convinced that the present relatively large volume of European East-West Trade in 1B items is the direct result of United States Government policies limiting control of such items. If the United States were to liberalize their own restrictions, East-West trade in 1B items, faced with United States competition, would probably decline. The Department of Commerce is of the opinion that they cannot continue to refuse export licences for 1B items when shipments of such items are being made by Western European countries. Present State Department sponsored policy does, however, have some support; the Pentagon would favour complete prohibition of all exports to Eastern Europe.

4. Interdepartmental discussions are still going on in the United States. I would gather that the original United States proposals for quantitative control which were presented to the Paris group will be considerably modified. This may mean adding additional items to the international list 1, prior consultation on certain 1B items and exchange of statistics on the remainder with a quota set somewhat higher than 50 percent of the 1949 trade figures.

5. Your views would be appreciated.

TELEGRAM EX-991 Ottawa, June 22, 1950

1. I refer to your Teletype WA-1095 of May 12th in which you asked for our comments on the United States proposals for control of the export from Western Europe to the USSR and its satellites in Europe of items which would come under List II as compiled by the Consultative Group in Paris on the Control of Exports to Eastern Europe.

2. We note particularly the views of the various United States government agencies on the effect of the United States quantitative control of 1B items. We would be grateful to receive, if possible, the State Department analysis of East-West European Trade mentioned in paragraph 2 of your teletype under reference. With regard to the actual United States proposals as forecast in paragraph 4 of your teletype under reference, the proposal for prior consultation in the Paris Group before particular goods are exported to the USSR and its satellites does not seem to us to be workable. Perhaps the delegates in Paris would agree to dividing the United States 1B list into two parts — (a) highly strategic goods, and (b) other goods on the United States 1B list. Export of the highly strategic goods to the USSR and its satellites would be prohibited and these items would appear on List I if the delegates in Paris agree. The remainder of the 1B items would be placed on List II.

3. With regard to the treatment of goods listed in List II, we consider that the suggestion of establishing firm quotas for the export of these goods to the USSR and its satellites would not be feasible. We think that the most the European countries participating in the Paris discussions will agree to is a post facto exchange of statistics of exports to the USSR and its satellites of the goods appearing on List II. This, if necessary, could be amplified by policy discussions in the Consultative Group. We, therefore, suggest modifying the United States proposals as summarized in paragraph 4 of your teletype under reference and suggest the following procedure:

(1) the addition to List I as it now stands of the highly strategic items on the United States 1B list, and

(2) the exchange of statistics of exports to the USSR and its satellites of goods appearing on List II which would be compiled as indicated in paragraph 2 above.

4. If this procedure could be agreed upon, and if the returns from the participating countries were accurate and complete, we would then be in a much better position to consider more advanced techniques of export control.

5. (With respect to merchant ships see our Teletype EX-773 of May 9th,† No. 645 to London and No. 180 to Paris. If we cannot get agreement on quantitative control of the export of merchant ships, we should at least press for the prohibition of exports to the USSR and its satellites in Europe of ships under an agreed upon age, and would suggest adding to List I and item "merchant ships under 20 (or 30) years old").

6. On the larger issue of East-West trade in general (paragraph 3 of your Teletype WA-1095) we think the Pentagon view that complete prohibition of all exports to the USSR and its satellites in Europe would be desirable is completely unrealistic. We do not see how we could gain agreement to prohibiting all East-West trade, and in any case some reports from Europe indicate that this trade does not represent a serious accretion to the strategic strength of the East. The position of Germany is particularly important. It is our view that East-West trade will expand with or without the permission of the controlling authorities in Germany. Until the Western governments provide markets in the West for Germany, Germany must seek them elsewhere and the USSR and its satellites are anxious to obtain products of German industry.

This message referred to London and Paris by air bag.

DESPATCH 508 Paris, June 28, 1950

Sir,

In continuation of previous correspondence on the control of exports to Eastern Europe I have the honour to report that a meeting of the Plenary Body, the so-called Consultative Group, was held on May 31. This was the first meeting to be held since January, when Canada was represented for the first time, and was called to approve reports by the Co-ordinating Committee (a subordinate body that meets regularly) and to discuss questions of policy and procedure which had arisen in the Co-ordinating Committee. We were represented by Mr. Macdonnell, the Minister, assisted by Mr. Kidd and Mr. Stone. M. Hervé Alphand, Head of the Economic Division of the Foreign Ministry, was Chairman.

2. The Minutes have only just become available and in very limited quantities. I enclose one copy in French.† As soon as the English version is produced we will send several copies.

The Minutes are for the most part self-explanatory but the following notes on certain items may be helpful:

(4) It will be observed that no conclusions could be reached during the discussion on general policy. There was a subsequent meeting of Heads of Delegations which is reported later in this despatch.

(9) There was general agreement that Sweden and Switzerland should be given maximum information about the work of the Group. The United States representatives regarded this as a step forward and thought there were grounds for hoping that both countries would model their policies to some extent on those of the Group although they did not wish to join it.

(10) This procedural item represents an attempt by the United States to have the principle recognized that when the Co-ordinating Committee (the junior body) agrees on a recommendation there is no need to suspend action until the Consultative Group meets. European members who are reluctant to impose controls have tended to argue that no decision can be taken or recommendation made between the infrequent meetings of the Consultative Group. This is mere stalling for time and the United States delegation was anxious to remove the excuse.

3. On June 1 there was a meeting restricted to Heads of Delegations to discuss policy, and it cannot be said that any great progress was made. In the Co-ordinating Committee rather important differences of opinion had emerged between those (notably the United States) anxious to restrict the export of a wide range of items and those (such as the United Kingdom) who preferred to place a more limited number of commodities under restrictive control. The Consultative Group explored the possibility of drafting a statement of policy which, after approval by Governments, would guide the Co-ordinating Committee in its consideration of individual items. But the differences are so deep-rooted that no neat formula is likely to overcome it. At one extreme it is possible to hold that any export which adds to the wealth of the Soviet orbit is dangerous and should be prohibited; at the other extreme it can be argued that control need only be extended to those articles which have a definite military end-use. No-one in this Group takes either extreme position, but differences of opinion are bound to crop up as to where the dividing line should be drawn. For example does road-building machinery, or coal-cutting equipment, contribute to the war potential of the Soviet Union? In our opinion it is difficult if not impossible to devise a general formula that will provide answers to such questions, and the case for or against each item must be argued on its merits.

4. This fact was recognized by the Consultative Group. The French tried their hand at drafting a statement of principle (copies are attached of a rough English version prepared by the French†), but it was generally recognized that this raised at least as many problems as it settled. What, for example, is meant by "a check upon the expansion of the war potential of the Soviet Union"? This can be given widely differing interpretations depending on whether one wants or does not want to sell a particular article to the Soviet orbit.

5. A major part of the meeting was devoted to hearing the United States representative (Mr. Charles Bohlen, United States Minister in Paris) present a case for a broad rather than a narrow measure of control. He urged that the greatest importance must be attached to the Soviet re-armament program which in three or four years' time (if both East and West continued their present rate of arming) would give the U.S.S.R. a vitally dangerous degree of superiority. The North Atlantic powers were engaged in a serious effort to meet this menace by pooling their defence efforts and building up balanced collective forces, and in the view of the United States Government it did not make sense to nullify those efforts by allowing the Soviet Union to strengthen its war potential with imports from the West. A number of United States estimates were presented of the magnitude of the Soviet military effort. 14% of national income was believed to be devoted to direct military purposes, compared with less than 6% (average) for the West including the United States. The Soviet Union was thought to be using twice as much steel for military purposes as the United States and from 8 to 26% more aluminum. There was also very considerable capital investment in war industries.

6. After stressing the magnitude of the Soviet war effort the United States representative went on to remind the Group of the important role played in Soviet industry by imports, from the time of the first Five-Year Plan in 1929 to the present. The United States felt that they were in possession of reliable indications of Soviet shortages through requests put forward at the time of Lend-Lease and through orders placed or submitted since the end of the war. Other useful indications were the items which the Soviet Union had tried to obtain from Western Germany and the reparations taken from Eastern Germany. The United States Government believed it had convincing evidence of the vulnerability of the Soviet war economy to export controls, and would continue to press for their expansion. Among fields mentioned as important were metal working machinery, non-friction ball bearings, scientific equipment and precision instruments, equipment for the oil and rubber industries, road building machinery and railroad equipment.

7. It was the intention of the United States representative to demonstrate that a serious problem exists, that sacrifices would have to be made all round, that United States policy was based on a careful review of the evidence and not on a mere desire to annoy the Russians, and above all that a resolute policy of international export control can make a real contribution to the military security of the Western world. His case was well put and the other representatives undertook to transmit his views to their Governments. It is to be expected that the subject will be discussed at the next meeting of the Consultative Group which will probably not occur until sometime in the autumn.

I have, etc.

DESPATCH 660 Paris, August 7, 1950

EXPORT CONTROLS — PROGRESS OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE WORK

1. On July 31 the Coordinating Committee held its final session for this summer. The Committee will now recess until September 12 when a programme of further work will be drawn up. At the moment the only meetings definitely scheduled are as follows:

September 14 — Merchant shipping;
October 3 — Transit trade (Customs experts).

2. During the last month the Committee has worked to a very arduous time-table. It has completed consideration of all the various sub-committees' reports on the individual items of the United States 1B list, and has recommended each item for inclusion on one of the three International Lists or for no list at all. In addition, the items on International List III as established on May 6 (Document No. 41†) have been reconsidered in order to see whether they could be placed under embargo or quantitative control or be discarded altogether. During this particular stage of the work all the items recommended for inclusion on International List III from the sub-committee reports were reconsidered and a number of changes were made. As a result, many delegates have felt the need for a consolidated report on the ultimate recommendations reached on all the items on the U.S. 1B list. It is hoped that this report will be ready shortly. We are therefore not sending you for the present individual Coordinating Committee reports on the various categories of the United States 1B list, as we did in the case of the Chemical and Rubber items (Document No. 94† forwarded with our Despatch No. 563 of July 13, 1950†) since they are not in their present form complete and do not set out the situation with any great clarity. If, however, the consolidated report does not appear within a reasonable length of time we shall forward the individual reports. In addition, it is hoped that the Secretariat will shortly produce a report on the consideration of old International List III, and amended International Lists showing all the items recently recommended for inclusion on these lists.

3. The present is perhaps a useful occasion to give you some impressions gained during the recent work of the Committee. In the first place, it has seemed to us that the lines of demarcation in the Committee have tended to become more sharply defined. In the discussion of a large number of the items, the United States, supported by ourselves, Germany and Italy, have been on the side of control, and the United Kingdom and the other European delegates in general against control. Much of the time the smaller European countries (particularly the Scandinavian countries, Belgium and the Netherlands) have looked to the United Kingdom for leadership and have voted almost exactly as the United Kingdom has. While the United Kingdom has admittedly cooperated with the United States on vital items, it nevertheless has led the opposition to control regardless of whether she herself produced the items or not. We have felt for some time now that the United States would have been well advised to have ironed out these differences on control policy with the United Kingdom before a complete discussion on the United States 1B list was held in the Committee, and if indeed this had been done it is more than probable that the present tendency of a division of the Committee into two blocs would not have arisen. The United States delegates here have told us that they share this view and have added that they consider Washington should have concentrated on a relatively small list of important items warranting control rather than proposing the whole of their 1B list for control.

4. Secondly, we have sensed that many of the European delegates feel they are being forced to accept some of these controls. They are not too sympathetic with the broad interpretation placed by the United States on the use of the word "strategic" as applied to a commodity to justify placing it under control, and consider that if this word is not interpreted carefully and the definition narrowed, it would eventually lead to having almost every commodity in trade under some form of control. These European countries are understandably reluctant to injure their economies by having too many controls in existence. This has raised in our minds doubts as to their reliability when they finally agree to placing an item under embargo or quantitative control. In fact the Danish and Norwegian delegates have intimated to us unofficially that if an item on International List I was vital to their economy they would probably disregard the International List and export the item. They consider that in many cases Sweden is exporting the same item anyway and is a far greater leak in the system of export controls than they are. Added to this is the feeling that from their point of view they are having to make far greater sacrifices than the United States is in implementing the export control policies of the group. The Netherlands and Belgium give us the same impression though they have not been so frank in expressing their opinions. They are more inclined to rely on technical loopholes such as prior commitments or make conditional acceptances. Another point in this general connection that has been mentioned to us is the reliability of the export statistics being submitted to the Committee. In the views of the German delegate, expressed privately to us, he stated that from past experience in European trade he did not place much reliance in some of the statistics being submitted by the European countries. We are not ourselves in a position to comment on this remark.

5. In conclusion we should like to add some comments on Canadian representation at these meetings. The meetings take up a very considerable amount of time and normally run for a day and a half, followed by half a day's rest, with this pattern being repeated week after week. Most delegations have special personnel for these meetings and experts available who can attend when the occasion arises. We, on the other hand, have had to handle this work with personnel from the Embassy. For the first part of this year, this was done completely by the Commercial Secretary's office, but as their staff has declined we have had to split attendance at meetings between a Commercial officer and an External Affairs officer of the Embassy. By employing personnel who have their regular functions at the Embassy to perform in addition to attending these meetings, we naturally cannot hope to compete with the other delegations in contributing to the discussion of the Committee. We have therefore by and large had to limit our role largely to that of an observer and a reporter. In this way we have hoped to keep you informed of the more important aspects of the Coordinating Committee's work and present any particular viewpoint to the Committee of which you have notified us. Much of the time our delegates have attended meetings without any more than the general guide of following the United States line, which in part accounts for the comments of the Danish delegate reported in your Letter No. E796 of July 14†. While this does not particularly enhance our prestige in the Committee, we do not see that much more can be done under the present set-up. For the future it would however be helpful if we could receive a fuller briefing on the Canadian attitude on many of the questions coming up for discussion in the Committee.

6. The question arises, of course, whether there is a sufficient Canadian interest to justify attendance at the meetings. You can answer this better than we can, but we are inclined to think that so long as a control group is in existence it would be a mistake for Canada not to be a member.

EXPORT OF MARINE RADAR TO BELGIUM

On June 19th, while you were away, we received a note from Trade and Commerce saying that Canadian Arsenals had received an order for marine radar to be installed in ships being built in Belgian shipyards for Russia. (Radar is on International List I). It was the opinion of Canadian Arsenals that if we did not fill the order the United Kingdom would. In the meantime, Canadian Arsenals informed their agent in Belgium that this export could not be approved under present Canadian regulations.

2. The matter was taken up by our representatives in Paris on the Co-ordinating Committee, who discussed the matter with individual delegations. The United States was firmly opposed to this export. The Belgian representative, who at first said that Belgium would refuse to grant a license for ships equipped with radar for Russia, later informed our representatives in Paris that ships were being built under a Trade Agreement of 1948, and that licenses for their export fully equipped had been issued in that year. The Belgian representative pointed out that the Consultative Committee on Exports to Eastern Europe had accepted that prior commitments under Trade Agreements between Western European countries and Eastern European countries would be absolved from application of the international lists. This made our position more difficult because although we did not have the trade agreement with Russia, it might be embarrassing to refuse an export to Belgium which is a member country of the Paris Committee.

3. A meeting was held in Mr. Couillard's office on July 27th, which was attended by Mr. Campbell, European Division, Mr. George, Defence Liaison, and Mr. Bowen of J.I.B.. It was decided that the best thing to do was to have our Embassy in Paris inform the Belgian representative on the Committee in writing that the export of radar to Soviet-dominated countries was prohibited and that, as we knew that the ten radar sets were eventually destined for the USSR, we presumed that the Belgian representative would not press to have us approve this export. Our representative in Paris was instructed to accompany this written communication with an oral statement to the effect that the Belgians might wish to raise this principle with the Consultative Group, but that Canada would only be satisfied with a specific decision of the Group relieving us of our obligation not to export goods on List I destined for the USSR and Russian-dominated countries. I attach a copy of the letter† which Mr. Kidd in Paris wrote to Mr. Vaes of the Belgian Embassy. The Belgian representative has stated that he would advise his Government not to take up the export of these radar sets to Russia in the Co-ordinating Committee in September.

4. Our representative in Paris has stated that if the question is raised in the Co-ordinating Committee, he assumed that we would wish him to take a neutral attitude and accept the decision of the rest of the Committee.[39] If, however, we want Paris to take any particular stand, they must have our instructions before the middle of September. The United States, I am sure, will strongly support our decision not to approve the export of these radar sets, and suggested at one time that a discussion of this problem might prove useful and would set a precedent for other countries to follow in making decisions on similar export applications.

5. Mr. Campbell of the European Division has suggested that we should discuss, with someone from J.I.B. in attendance, what course of action to recommend in case the matter is brought up before the Co-ordinating Committee by the Belgians. Do you think a meeting is necessary?[40]

EXPORT CONTROLS — PROGRESS OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE WORK

1. We have been in communication with the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Joint Intelligence Bureau of the Defence Research Board on the subject of the general policy to be followed in the Coordinating Committee on the control of exports to Eastern Europe.

2. A reiteration of our general position on strategic exports from Canada and Western Europe may be useful.

3. First of all, it must be emphasized that our representatives on the Committee will almost always wish to support the United States representatives insofar as the latter's proposals refer to their 1A and 1B lists. Under the Hyde Park Agreement,[41] a wartime system of close cooperation with the United States was developed. Goods, the export of which to all other destinations was controlled by that country, flowed freely into Canada. Our anxiety to maintain such agreement is understandable in view of the close integration of our economy with that of the United States, especially in many of the fields which are concerned with strategic materials and arms. If free movement of strategic materials is to take place within the North American Continent, a closely similar system of controls on exports to other countries must be maintained. Otherwise, one country will act as a back-door for the export of products of the other. Accordingly, the United States lists 1A and 1B are the basic guides in Canadian consideration of what items may be considered strategic and non-strategic.[42]

4. In the light of the present international situation, the Joint Industrial Mobilization Planning Committee is now engaged in reviving the Hyde Park Agreements. Enclosed for your information is a copy of our draft of the proposed statement of principles arrived at by this Committee which has been reviewing the Hyde Park Agreement.[43]

5. Discussion of the contents of lists 1A and 1B between Canada and the United States takes place at periodic meetings between United States officials and ourselves at Ottawa or Washington. Our export control policy is established at these meetings, and lists 1A and 1B represent the result of that determination. Naturally, it must be the responsibility of the United States authorities to take the lead in presenting these lists for acceptance to Western European countries. Any comments which we may have to make concerning their effect on our supply position will generally be made on this side of the Atlantic.

6. Nevertheless, it is desirable for Canadian representatives to continue in attendance at the meetings of the Coordinating Committee. In the first place, we may wish to give whatever support is feasible to the United States representations. Secondly, we have a similar interest to that of the United States in actively persuading other Western European countries to accept as much as possible of lists 1A and 1B and to enforce the controls adequately in order to restrict as far as possible the flow of strategically valuable supplies out of Western Europe. Thirdly, we have an interest in bringing Sweden and Switzerland into cooperation, if possible.

7. We shall continue to supply you from time to time with comments on problems coming constantly to our attention and to that of the Department of Trade and Commerce. In the near future we shall transmit to you a report on discussions with the United States authorities which are taking place in Ottawa on or about the 14th of this month. The International Lists will then be reviewed in relation to the restrictions imposed by the United States and Canada.

8. We concur, therefore, in your view that it is important for a Canadian representative to continue to attend the meetings of the Committee, but in view of the extremely close integration of our export policy for strategic materials with that of the United States, the role of our representative will be limited.

EXPORT CONTROLS — WORK OF COORDINATING COMMITTEE

On the 14th and 15th September, talks were held between United States and Canadian officials on the subject of controls on exports from the two countries.

While we will be forwarding a fuller résumé of the discussions that took place, it may be of use to you to have some impressions of that part of the meeting in which the operation of the Coordinating Committee and Consultative Group was considered.

2. The United States delegation consisted of:

Mr. Karl Anderson, Director, British Commonwealth Division, O.I.T.
Mr. Mishell George, Chief, Liaison and Analysis Section, O.I.C.
Mr. Robert Wright, Assistant Chief, Economic Resources, State Department.

3. The United States officials, in discussing export controls in Western Europe, expressed dissatisfaction with the effectiveness of present controls over items on International List II. They are apparently intending to continue pressure in the Committee. The impression in the United States was that the European participants could not have had access to the fuller intelligence reports on the USSR and Eastern Europe which the United States possessed. They therefore contemplated bringing their information to the attention of the Committee in order to impress upon Western European countries the fact that the USSR had in effect a wartime economy, and that materials harmless in peacetime have now become strategic.

4. The United States did not wish to insist on an absolute embargo of materials on the 1B list, although that was virtually their own policy, but they did wish to see a reduction of strategic exports on that list from Western Europe to about 50% on the basis of a 1947 base period, or a similar arrangement. They were not emphasizing the necessity for formal controls, but wanted to be sure controls were effective.

5. When the United States representatives were asked what their attitude was in the face of the argument of many countries that the restrictions would weaken traditional "East-West" trade, they replied that their probable future argument would be that the end to be achieved was not to cut off or weaken trade, but to be assured that, strategically speaking, the balance of trade should be in favour of the West — that the question should be "Who gets stronger faster?"

6. We referred to the argument expressed in your Despatch D.660 of August 7th that the Canadian representatives on the Committee felt able to play only a limited role and had to be guided largely by the United States lead. The reaction to this was quite definite. The United States representatives had always heard good reports from other delegations concerning Canadian participation on the Committee, and it was felt that Canada had much to contribute (especially in facilitating compromise) in expressing helpful opinions on policy and procedure. They also invited us to forward any criticisms or suggestions to them through our Embassy in Washington.

7. The United States representatives did give the impression, however, that they felt no compromise could be made on the inclusion of strategic materials on the lists, and seemed to be surprised that any country should attempt to bargain or compromise in a field where "discipline" was so much needed, and where a sense of urgency seemed to be lacking at the present. Here, too, they considered that a release of intelligence would be effective.

8. We asked the United States representatives about the possibility of persuading the participating countries to effect stringent controls when Sweden and Switzerland remained outside the system as "back doors" for the export or trans-shipment of strategic materials to Eastern Europe. They replied that Sweden was not considered a very serious "leak". The United States was pleased with their export controls: the Swedes gave information freely, and were prepared to cooperate. Switzerland, however, was a bad "leak", but it was hoped that when agreement had been arrived at on the International Lists by the participating countries, the latter would be in a better position to persuade Sweden and Switzerland to adopt similar measures. In the meantime, the United States was closely watching all exports to Switzerland, and contemplated requiring a declaration as to the end use of the product. They contemplate suggesting this procedure to the Co-ordinating Committee for use by the members as a technique to avoid the leak.

9. The problem of trans-shipment in the Free Ports was considered. The United States had found it impossible to screen shipments to these ports to prevent re-export and diversion, either in the United States or by their Foreign Service in the country concerned. They were therefore considering a way in which the authorities of the Free Port would be able to prevent goods going astray. The proposal is that the bill of lading and the Ship's Manifest be endorsed when a strategic shipment is made, so that an attempt to divert or re-export would be immediately perceived. The country of the Free Port in question could then inform the source country at once of the proposed diversion or trans-shipment.

10. As a result of a recent rapid extension of the United States Positive List to new groups of commodities, Canadian control had fallen somewhat out of line. The divergences were discussed in detail with a view to extending the Canadian list to cover the export of commodities added to the United States list. This action on our part will make it unnecessary for the United States to require firms to obtain licenses to export to Canada.

11. We trust that this resumé will be useful to you as an indication of future United States policy in the Coordinating Committee. We shall forward to you as soon as they are available detailed reports on the meeting.

EXPORT OF RADAR EQUIPMENT TO BELGIUM

1. The Belgian request that Canada supply radar sets for ships destined to the U.S.S.R. was discussed in the Coordinating Committee on October 6. Correspondence on this subject between the Belgian delegate and Mr. Kidd had previously been tabled; copies are enclosed for your information.†

2. While the Committee could not, of course, agree on an unanimous recommendation, the majority of the members considered that Canada's refusal was in accord with the general agreement on strategic controls, and that the Belgian authorities were not justified in pressing for the licensing of these sets.

3. The following comments were expressed by delegates, most of whom had received the views of their governments on this question:

Denmark supported the Belgian viewpoint.

France considered that the Belgian thesis, i.e. that no participating country should control exports of strategic materials to another participating country, was not correct. It was also pointed out that the Belgian firm could obtain its release from any contract to supply ships fully equipped with radar, by pleading the non-availability of this equipment.

Germany stated that the problem should be considered from a practical standpoint and was of the opinion that as export controls were designed to prevent such trade, the Canadian attitude was quite correct. The delegate was of the opinion, however, that should Belgium find herself penalized by her inability to deliver this equipment, the Coordinating Committee could recommend that Canada supply these sets, a recommendation which the German Government felt that Canada should accept.

Italy supported the Canadian views.

The Netherlands delegate stated that, while the responsibility of ensuring that strategic materials reached no prohibited destination rested with the exporting country, the entry of any such material into the economy of another participating country transferred this responsibility to the importing country. Consequently, it was the privilege of Belgium to decide in this case whether the radar sets should be sent to Russia.

Norway considered that the Canadian government had the right to refuse or to accept this order, as a sovereign power.

The U.K. delegate stated that the Belgian Government was, in effect, arguing that the Belgian contract to deliver this equipment was binding on other participating countries a principle which was not acceptable to the U.K.

The U.S. stated that they would deny this license for sets of U.S. manufacture. The delegate expressed his surprise at the German statement that the Co-ordinating Committee could ask a member to export strategic materials. In his opinion, the terms of reference of the Committee were confined to the prohibition of certain trade, and that no government was obligated to consider a recommendation to export any commodity.

4. It will be noted from the foregoing that with the exception of Denmark and the Netherlands, the Committee was in agreement with our stand on this question.

5. It is quite possible that Belgium may bring up this subject again in the Coordinating Committee, basing their case on the results of non-delivery of these ships fully equipped. The Belgian delegate informs us that the trade agreement in question has been very important and profitable to Belgium, and that every effort will be made to honour it fully.

EXPORT CONTROLS — MEETING OF CONSULTATIVE GROUP

1. The meeting of the Consultative Group took place in Paris on November 29, and completed all the business on its agenda in one day. The minutes† of this meeting will be forwarded to you as soon as they are received (which may not be for some time) but in the meantime we thought you might like to receive a summary report of the principal results of this meeting.

2. The main results of the meeting may be conveniently summarized under the following headings:

1. London Tri-partite Talks

The United Kingdom delegate made a statement on behalf of the Governments of France, United Kingdom and United States on the results of the recent tri-partite talks held in London and of which you have been informed in outline through the United Kingdom High Commissioner in Ottawa (your telegram No. 442 of November 28, 1950†). The study undertaken in London by the three governments has resulted in agreement being reached by them on a division into three classes of export controls over certain key items in industries contributing to war potentials. This has, as you are aware, been made as follows: 1) goods, the export of which to the Soviet Bloc should be prohibited; 2) goods, the export of which to the Soviet Bloc should be quantitatively restricted; 3) goods, regarding which there should be an exchange of information on exports made to the Soviet Bloc. The details of these lists which include additions and modifications to the present International Lists I and II, and the principles on which the quantitative controls should be operated and the exchange of information conducted are covered in Coordinating Committee Document No. 207,† three copies of which are enclosed with this despatch. In addition three copies of a document† listing the criteria used in establishing these lists are enclosed. It is the proposal of the Governments of France, U.K. and U.S. that these new lists of items should be accepted by the member countries of the Paris Group.

Little comment was possible on these proposals at the present meeting of the Consultative Group. The United States delegate indicated that these lists providing for additional controls would be considered by his Government as reasonably final, except for modifications shown to be necessary by experience. Some European delegates mentioned the need for time to study these proposals and this was agreed upon by the Group although the three powers presenting the proposals stressed the urgency of having the additional controls put into effect at the earliest possible date. As a result, the Consultative Group agreed to recommend that all member countries should give an indication of their attitude towards these proposals before Christmas with a view to holding a further meeting of the Consultative Group early in January. At that meeting, it is hoped that the proposals can be discussed in detail, and it will be necessary for us to know whether there are any items which you are not prepared to accept. Your general views on these proposals would therefore be appreciated as soon as possible and subsequently your detailed comments on the desirability of placing the individual items under the revised classes of control.

2. Transit Trade

The U.S. proposed that the technical sub-committees which will be meeting on December 3 should re-examine the whole system of controls. It was agreed that the terms of reference of the technical sub-committees and the Cordinating Committees should be broadened to permit a complete study of the whole field of techniques of control to be made.

3. Trade Agreements

After a general discussion of this subject, it was agreed to recommend to governments that information both as to the results of bilateral trade negotiations with the Soviet bloc as well as any other information obtained during the course of discussions, should be passed to the Consultative Group or the Coordinating Committee. It was felt that such information would assist the Committee in assessing the demand from the Soviet bloc for particular items. We supported this proposal while making clear that Canada did not enter into commodity agreements with the Soviet bloc.

4. Black Lists

The proposal to institute black lists of firms attempting to defeat the purpose of strategic controls was not accepted, as the U.S. were not prepared to vote for this recommendation. It was decided that this subject would be discussed again after the re-examination of control techniques referred to in point 2.

5. Cooperation by Non-member Countries

The French delegate reported that Switzerland had been approached by a representative of the Consultative Group and had been asked to embargo exports of strategic materials produced in Switzerland and institute control over trans-shipment and re-export of strategic materials originating in member countries. While no official response had been given the Swiss spokesman stated that the whole subject was under study by the Swiss Government and that he felt that control over transshipment and diversion of critical materials could soon be established. It was agreed that a representative of the Consultative Group should approach the Swedish Government with a similar request.

The advisability of inviting other countries, in particular Greece, Turkey and Portugal, to join in the work of the Paris Group will be studied by the Coordinating Committee. This study will be conducted with the aim of considering the value of participation by any of these countries in the light of the volume of their trade with Soviet bloc countries. Some representatives had doubts about the value.

6. Secrecy

It was agreed that the secret status of the work being done by the Paris Group should be retained and that no statements regarding this work should be given to the press.

7. Future Work of Coordinating Committee

The Chairman of the Coordinating Committee made a statement in which he indicated that in his view the mandate of the Coordinating Committee had been considerably enlarged by the tri-partite proposals and the U.S. proposals on transit trade. For this reason, he felt that a number of points would require re-examination, particularly the rule of unanimity in the Coordinating Committee, the status of national representation, the national contributions for the support of the Secretariat and the increase that would probably be necessary in the staff of the Secretariat. While no final decision was taken on any of these points, it was generally agreed that it was desirable for the member countries to have at least one permanent representative available for the work of the Coordinating Committee, and that a Committee appointed by the Chairman of the Consultative Group and to include representatives of one or two of the member countries selected by him should consider the question of any increase in the Secretariat of the Coordinating Committee. (The question of a Canadian contribution towards the support of the Secretariat is the subject of a separate communication†).

8. Belgian Proposal Regarding Trade Dislocations Resulting From Export Controls

The Belgian delegate proposed that the Coordinating Committee should be empowered to study the impact of trade dislocations and shortages of materials which might result from the application of export controls on strategic materials. Although some delegates, notably the Danes, the U.S. and ourselves raised a word of caution on the danger of over-lapping work being performed by similar studies conducted on this subject by such bodies as O.E.E.C. and N.A.T.O., it was agreed that such a study might be undertaken at the request of a member country if a significant degree of economic dislocation could be demonstrated. We interpret this as simply an opportunity for any country that feels it can demonstrate economic hardship to bring the point up for discussion with other participating countries.

9. Early Action Required

Of all the points covered in the meeting the only one requiring early action is the tri-partite proposal on lists mentioned in Section 1 of this despatch. We would assume that you would in general be prepared to accept the lists which will be enforced by the United States, especially when the United Kingdom and France have agreed to them. In the interest of bringing along the more hesitant European members of the Group it would be helpful if we could give support to the lists as they stand. In any event we are most anxious to transmit a statement of the Canadian attitude to the Secretariat before Christmas.

2. Has the Belgian representative offered any explanation as yet regarding the recent Trade Agreement between Belgium and the U.S.S.R., the subject of our despatch No. E1514 of December 1?† We would be interested to know what he has to say when Item 3 is discussed in the Committee if an explanation has not been given before then.

3. We have been informed that Switzerland has recently made provision for import and export controls on certain strategic materials. These controls should decrease the danger of trans-shipment, and we welcome this evidence of co-operation by the Swiss Government. Greece, Turkey, and Portugal do not offer any serious problems as far as Canada is concerned as we have very little, if any, strategic material moving through their ports.

4. We consider that problems relating to dislocation of trade resulting from export controls could be dealt with more efficiently in other international bodies such as OEEC or NATO. This is a matter of concern largely to the European countries themselves and we share the view that should the Co-ordinating Committee attempt to handle these problems, there might be considerable over-lapping.

Memorandum from Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to Cabinet

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 145-50 [Ottawa], May 17, 1950

LOANS TO IMMIGRANTS

1. There has been a substantial decrease in immigration to Canada since 1948. Under existing conditions it is estimated that the total immigration in 1950 will not exceed 60,000. The main factor in the situation has been the inability of immigrants to transfer their capital to Canada.

2. It is recommended that the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy in collaboration with the officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration be directed to study the possibility of providing loans to selected immigrants on the security of their frozen assets abroad, or under alternative conditions, the recommendations of the Committee to be submitted to the Cabinet for consideration.

3. As there is a serious shortage of female domestics and nurses' aids in Canada and the supply of domestics in the "displaced person" category in Europe is about exhausted, it is evident that some other sources of supply must be found and some assistance furnished if the movement is to continue. As the chief obstacle to securing this class of immigrant is the lack of funds in the possession of immigrants in the United Kingdom and continental Europe, it is recommended that consideration be given to providing loans to such immigrants to cover the cost of transportation from port of embarkation in Europe to distribution centre in Canada on a refundable basis, details to be worked out by the officials of the Departments of Citizenship and Immigration and Labour.[44]

IMMIGRATION REGULATIONS; ADMISSIBLE CLASSES

6. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration submitted a draft Order in Council to liberalize present immigration policy so as to allow admission, under the regulations, of other persons than those in the special classes of agricultural workers, near relatives and fiancés. Any person other than one of Asiatic race who met, to the satisfaction of the Minister, certain requirements relating to suitability and capacity to be integrated into the Canadian community, as set forth in Section 38 of the Immigration Act, would be admitted. Immigration had been falling steadily and it appeared that only 60,000 immigrants would enter this year as compared to the 93,000 of last year. Australia, on the other hand, had last year admitted 167,000 persons. While there were certain factors that made the Australian situation different, it was hoped that the new policy would halt the downward trend in Canada.

(Minister's memorandum, May 17, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 144A-50)†

7. The Minister of Agriculture felt that the present Canadian situation did not permit large scale immigration of agricultural workers and that immigration should come from other groups.

8. The Cabinet, after further discussion, approved the proposals of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration for amending the regulations governing admissible classes of immigrants, subject to certain minor changes; an Order in Council to be passed accordingly.

Memorandum from Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to Cabinet

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 174-50 [Ottawa], June 23, 1950

ADMINISTRATION OF ORDER-IN-COUNCIL P.C. 2856

1. By the enactment of Order-in-Council P.C. 2856, dated 9th June, 1950, approval was given to certain proposals designed to give effect to the expressed policy of the Government to foster the growth of the population of Canada by insuring the careful selection of as large a number of immigrants as can advantageously be absorbed in the national economy, without making a fundamental alteration in the character of the population.

2. The implementation of the policy enunciated in the foregoing paragraph concerns directly or indirectly several departments of the government as immigration affects areas of administration placed under their individual or joint responsibility.

3. Prior to the creation of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, immigration policy questions were submitted for decision through the Cabinet Immigration Committee. At a lower level, some questions of practical application were considered by the Interdepartmental Immigration-Labour Committee.

4. It is now proposed to establish an interdepartmental committee to report to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on problems of immigration policy and to provide for the effective coordination of the activities of departments concerned with the implementation of such policy. This committee would be composed of the deputy ministers of Agriculture, Citizenship and Immigration, External Affairs, Finance, Labour, National Health and Welfare, Trade and Commerce and of a representative of The Privy Council Secretariat, or their representatives.

5. Order-in-Council P.C. 2856 does not affect the conditions governing the admission of British subjects, citizens of the United States and native citizens of France. They remain admissible as heretofore, subject only to complying with civil and medical requirements and being able to support themselves until they have found gainful employment.

6. Under the provisions of Order-in-Council P.C. 2856 all other immigrants, with the exception of Asiatics, who are excluded under Order-in-Council P.C. 2115, dated 16th September, 1930, must satisfy the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, whose decision shall be final, that:

(a) they are suitable immigrants having regard to the climatic, social, educational, industrial, labour or other conditions or requirements of Canada; and

(b) they are not undesirable owing to their peculiar customs, habits, mode of life, methods of holding property, or because of their probable inability to become readily adapted or integrated into the life of the Canadian community and to assume the duties of Canadian citizenship within a reasonable time after their entry.

7. At the operational level, it is expedient that the Minister should have in the exercise of his power of decision the assistance of a departmental advisory committee composed of his deputy minister and senior officials of the Immigration Branch. This committee should have the power to seek the advice and assistance of specialists from departments of the federal and provincial governments, the representatives of national or provincial organizations, professional associations, labour unions, manufacturers associations, representatives of educational institutions and of such other persons or organized bodies from whom it may deem it expedient to seek advice.

8. In cooperation with the department of Labour and the Unemployment Insurance Commission, it is planned to assess as far in advance as possible the prospective requirements of the Canadian labour market in order to encourage the admission of certain occupational classes for whose services there is an actual need.

9. To achieve effective selection of desirable immigrants abroad, the department of Labour have agreed to the request of the Immigration Branch to train a number of Immigration Officers in the National Employment Service offices across Canada.

10. The Settlement Service of the Immigration Branch will pursue actively its programme of selection overseas and continue to develop in Canada settlement opportunities for trained agriculturists, skilled artisans and small businessmen who wish to establish themselves as independent producers in rural areas. Pending the solution of the exchange problem the Settlement Service is the most effective instrument for the implementation of the policy of the Government as defined in paragraph 1. A substantial number of desirable immigrants who would find it impossible to come to Canada owing to financial difficulties are now able to come forward as the result of the activity of this Service.

11. It is intended to pursue, in cooperation with the provincial Governments surveys already in progress to determine the possibilities for the establishment of immigrants in their respective provinces.

12. In consultation with the departments of the federal and provincial governments it is proposed to encourage and facilitate the establishment of immigrants capable of contributing to the development of Canada's natural resources and of providing employment for Canadian citizens.

13. Beginning with the effective date of Order-in-Council P.C. 2856, July 1st, 1950, and until further notice, it is proposed to admit the following classes:

I. Without Reference to the Departmental Advisory Committee on Immigration

(a) British subjects, citizens of the United States and citizens of France, as defined in Order-in-Council P.C. 2856;

(b) relatives sponsored by legal residents of Canada in cases where satisfactory settlement conditions are established, such conditions to include good prospects of employment for persons other than dependent relatives;

(c) persons applying for admission to Canada for the purpose of marrying a legal resident thereof, provided the prospective husband is able to maintain his intended wife;

(d) agriculturists who have sufficient means to farm in Canada;

(e) immigrants individually nominated by employers in Canada who establish that their services are required; provided that the number of immigrants nominated by an employer in any one group application does not exceed 25;

(f) domestics and nurses' aides;

(g) immigrants recommended by the Settlement Service of the Immigration Branch.

II. After Reference to the Departmental Advisory Committee on Immigration

(h) immigrants bringing capital to Canada for the purpose of establishing an industry or business;

(i) immigrants coming to Canada as artisans or small businessmen for the purpose of establishing themselves in rural areas;

(j) members of professional classes and other intellectuals who are deemed capable of making a significant contribution to the economic or cultural life of Canada;

(k) group movements other than those defined in paragraph 13 (I.e);

(l) immigrants deemed to be desirable and suitable in accordance with the true intent of the Regulations enacted by Order-in-Council P.C. 2856.

14. It is proposed that the Immigration Branch continue to recommend the admission by Order-in-Council of Asiatics, other than those referred to in Order-in-Council P.C. 2115, in accordance with existing directives from Cabinet, as follows:

(a) the unmarried children of Canadian citizens of Chinese racial origin, who are otherwise admissible, if such children are over 18 years of age but have not yet reached their nineteenth birthday, and if such a child or children would be the last member or members of the family remaining in China;

(b) a widowed mother who, having previously resided in Canada, returned to China for permanent residence, if all her children are residents of Canada;

(c) the wife and unmarried children under 18 years of age of a Canadian resident of Chinese racial origin, if he applied for naturalization prior to December 31st, 1949, and if he is of good character and there is no likelihood that his application will be denied. A further condition is that the applicant's family must have gone to Hong Kong prior to December 1st, 1949;

(d) the proposed wife or husband of a Canadian citizen of East Indian racial origin, provided the prospective husband can give evidence that he is able to support his intended wife;

(e) the sons of Canadian citizens of East Indian racial origin who had passed their eighteenth birthday on December 7th, 1941, but who were prevented from coming to Canada because of the war; provided such sons are single and the application for their admission was made before December 7th, 1941;

(f) the sons of Canadian citizens of East Indian racial origin in the following two groups (and, if married with their wives and children) who were under 18 years of age on the 1st September, 1939;

(i) the sons of 210 East Indians who were registered in 1939 and were given permanent status in August, 1947, and who are now resident in Canada;

(ii) the sons of other East Indians who had been legally admitted and who are now Canadian citizens residing in Canada;

(g) persons of Armenian, Lebanese or Syrian racial origin who are close relatives, i.e.

the husband or wife;
the son, daughter, brother or sister together with husband or wife and unmarried children;
the father or mother;
the orphan nephew or niece under 21 years of age;
fiancé(e)s, as defined in paragraph 13 (I.c) of legal residents of Canada who are in a position to receive and care for such relatives.

15. All applications other than those referred to in this Memorandum will be submitted to the "departmental advisory committee on immigration" for consideration and recommendation.

16. It is recommended that Cabinet indicate its approval of:

(a) the general proposals submitted by this Memorandum;

(b) the creation of an Interdepartmental Advisory Committee on Immigration to report to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration on problems of immigration policy and to provide for the effective co-ordination of the activities of the departments of Government concerned with the implementation of such policy; the said Committee to be composed of the deputy ministers of Agriculture, Citizenship and Immigration, External Affairs, Finance, Labour, National Health and Welfare, Trade and Commerce and of a representative of the Privy Council Secretariat, or their representatives, the deputy minister of Immigration and Citizenship to be the Chairman of the said Committee; and

(c) the creation of a Departmental Advisory Committee on Immigration to advise and assist the Minister of Immigration and Citizenship with respect to the administration of the Immigration Act and Regulations, applications for admission to Canada, certified cases submitted for review, appeal cases and such other matters as may be referred to it by the Minister; the said Committee to be composed of the deputy minister of Citizenship and Immigration and senior officials of the Immigration Branch, with authority to call upon representatives of departments of the federal and provincial Governments, national or provincial organizations or associations or other organized bodies and such persons as the deputy minister of Citizenship and Immigration may designate from time to time, and to pay, as may be required, the cost of transportation and living expenses incurred by such persons to attend the meetings of the said Committee in a consultative capacity.[45]

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 177-70 [Ottawa], July 3, 1950

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO IMMIGRANTS

1. On May 18 the Cabinet directed the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy to examine proposals for providing financial assistance to immigrants. The Committee has considered a number of possibilities.

2. Since the matter was last before the Cabinet, the U.K. government has announced a slight relaxation in transfers of funds by U.K. immigrants. Hitherto it has been provided that an immigrant could transfer a total of £1,000 in four annual instalments of £250 each. In cases of need, the entire £1,000 can now be transferred immediately. This measure should assist emigrants considerably and renders unnecessary a proposal the Committee considered for advances by the Canadian government of the total transferable instalments immediately on the arrival of U.K. immigrants.

3. The Committee recommends that the following measures might be considered favourably:

(a) Increase in Transferable Funds

The Committee considered it might be desirable to approach the U.K. government to investigate the possibility of having the total of transferable funds raised from £1,000 to £2,000. Similar enquiries might be made of other European governments to see if the limits of transfer could be raised.

(b) Guarantees of Loans Against Funds Made Transferable Under Special Agreements

It might be possible to reach agreements with the United Kingdom and foreign governments under which they would make more than the basic amount of funds transferable if the transfer were to take place over a fairly lengthy period of years. If so, the Committee felt that the government might consider a system by which it would give guarantees to commercial banks of the transfer of such funds and against exchange risks. On the basis of such guarantees the banks would be encouraged to make loans to immigrants on arrival in Canada to assist in their establishment or to enable investment in business, etc. The details would have to be worked out by the Departments of Finance, Citizenship and Immigration, and External Affairs if approval in principle were given.

The Committee were of the view that no loans should be made or guaranteed in the absence of definite agreements by foreign governments to allow the transfer of funds within a specified period, i.e. — no loans against frozen funds.

(c) "Buying in" Under Social Security Provisions

The Committee considered it would be desirable to investigate two possibilities:

(i) Of establishing rates at which immigrants might "buy in" to unemployment insurance benefits, and possibly family allowances, immediately on arrival. If these could be worked out foreign governments might allow additional funds to be transferred to cover such "buying in", or possibly might enable payments into their own social security schemes to be withdrawn to the amount required for "buying in" in Canada.

(ii) Of working out reciprocal arrangements under which persons in good standing under social security schemes would be accepted in good standing on movement from another country to Canada, or from Canada to the other country. Arrangements along these lines have been worked out between the United Kingdom and Australia and New Zealand and appear to be helpful. Exchange difficulties will be a problem but something may be possible.

(d) Off-season Trans-Atlantic Fares

Vessels have been arriving in Canada at off-seasons during the past year or so with less than full passenger lists. Fares are somewhat, but not substantially, reduced in off-seasons. The Committee considered it would be worth discussing with passenger lines the possibility of having sharper cuts in fares in off-seasons if larger passenger movement might result.

4. The Committee are investigating the desirability of relaxing present provisions concerning the customs-free entry of immigrants' effects.

5. The Committee did not favour a proposal that the government advance fares to female immigrants willing to enter service as domestics. It was felt that an obligation to stay in such service for a certain period, amounting to an indenture, would cause difficulty and criticism. The Committee felt there would be no objection to encouraging non-governmental agencies to enter into such arrangements if any were willing to do so.

6. If the Cabinet approve the proposals set forth in paragraph 3 they might wish to authorize the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, in conjunction with other interested departments, to take such steps as may be necessary with a view to putting them into effect.[46]

At its July 5, 1950 meeting, Cabinet authorized the interested departments to take action along the lines indicated on the understanding that no programs concerning loans or "buying into" social security provisions would be undertaken without further consideration by Cabinet.

CANADIAN IMMIGRATION ACTIVITIES IN THE UNITED KINGDOM AND WESTERN EUROPE

Colonel Fortier, the Deputy Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, telephoned me this morning to say that his Department is sending the Director of Immigration, Mr. Smith, to Europe for a six-weeks' visit in order to stimulate the drive for immigration to Canada. He will be leaving on September 21 and will be visiting the United Kingdom, France, Belgium, Switzerland, the Netherlands and Denmark.

2. Colonel Fortier made two requests.

3. The first is that we should inform Canada House and the Embassy in Paris that Mr. Smith is authorized to discuss immigration matters with the U.K. and French Governments, and, in particular, the problem of currency regulations on immigration. Colonel Fortier said that discussions on this matter were started some time ago by us with the United Kingdom and French Governments and that some reply has been received from Paris but none from London.

4. The second request was that, during the next few months in our information activities in the United Kingdom and these Western European countries, we should give priority to information activities directly related to stimulating immigration to Canada.

5. Colonel Fortier said that he would confirm this conversation by letter today, which I will send to the Consular Division for disposition and consultation with the Economic, Information and European Divisions. I suggested to Colonel Fortier that it might be useful if we were to arrange a meeting in the Department at which Mr. Smith would discuss these problems with representatives of the divisions concerned. If you agree with this suggestion, would you be good enough to arrange a meeting.

6. Colonel Fortier is naturally anxious to stimulate the flow of immigration immediately so that the immigrants can come across the Atlantic during the off-season when more accommodation is available. I think we should do everything we can to assist him in this objective.

IMMIGRATION

I had the opportunity of meeting Messrs. Smith and Benoit[47] on September 26th prior to my departure for Torquay. We discussed in detail the assistance which you requested I should give, namely on the subjects of contacts with United Kingdom authorities and with steamship and travel organizations, publicity and office accommodation.

2. On the first point, it was agreed that it would be useful if Mr. Smith and Mr. Benoit saw Sir Cecil Syers.[48] Arrangements were made for an appointment to be fixed at the convenience of the Canadian officials concerned.

3. On the second point of contacts with the North Atlantic passenger steamship conference, I advised these officials that the matter of "off-season" reductions and reservations was being considered by the liner conference in Paris and that though they were free to see Patteson[49] of the C.P.R. (who is chairman of the liner conference this year), and indeed any one else, the question had been put up fully to the Conference but we were not sanguine as to the outcome because tourist classes both ways were filled to capacity. In my opinion, the only way to get a reduction of shipping costs and additional spaces would be by taking advantage of a ship such as the Aorangi which is coming off the Canada-Australasian Line, or indeed the Georgic which is reported to have sailed from New York with only 87 of its 1600 passengers. Such a ship, converted for student travel eastwards and emigrant travel westwards, with financial assistance by the Canadian Government, might be a specific attraction to that class of migrant who has not much money.

4. On the question of publicity, it was agreed at the meeting that a vast publicity campaign would be wasteful. After the meeting Mr. Campbell Moodie[50] had long talks with these officials on the possibility of developing publicity as outlined in your telegram under reference.

5. As for office accommodation, it was doubtful whether Piccadilly would be a useful centre. Indeed, Sackville House does not seem very suitable. The general area which might be better suited would be in the Trafalgar Square—Pall Mall area because of the close proximity of shipping agencies and of two Canadian banks.

6. But the problem which proved more intractable was that of the approach which should be made to the United Kingdom authorities. At the meeting, I expressed the view that it was not a "starter" to ask the United Kingdom authorities to increase the limit of exportable funds allowed to U.K. emigrants from £1000 to £2000. After the informal approach we had already made, as reported in my despatch No. 2108† I did not think it wise to raise this issue informally again or, certainly, to raise it formally.

7. The meeting did not throw any light upon the purpose of a further approach to the Commonwealth Relations Office. Subsequently, it became apparent that the immigration officials felt they had been sent to the United Kingdom to "negotiate" an agreement with the U.K. authorities on the specific point of raising the £1000 limit or of obtaining such other concessions as would enhance the flow of U.K. migrants to Canada. The approach should be, in their view, a political one sufficiently strong and on a sufficiently high level to offset the inevitable Treasury opposition to any such 'liberalization' of capital exports.

8. After re-examining the matter thoroughly, Mr. C.E.S. Smith and Mr. G.R. Benoit offered three suggestions for 'negotiation' with the United Kingdom Government:

(a) increase all emigrants' allowances from £1000 to £2000; or

(b) increase heads of families allowances to £2000 payable in four £500 instalments; or

(c) increase heads of family allowances to £1500 transferable on arrival and single persons' to £1000 payable in two instalments.

9. The suggestions in 8(a) and (c) would be such, in my view, as to constitute a large potential dollar drain on the Exchequer. In addition, a large part of this potential dollar drain would not serve to stimulate emigration because it would be applied to meet the remittances which would then be due to U.K. emigrants already in the U.S.A. and in Canada. Further, such outgoings would be in direct competition with claims on estates and the like. The suggestion in paragraph 8(b) that heads of families be allowed to take out £2000 in four £500 instalments would result in a much smaller dollar drain. For two reasons, however, I do not think that we ought to suggest a specific figure. The first is that we would be placed in the position of having to justify more precisely our contention that a "liberalization" of capital exports would enhance migration from the United Kingdom — and this is the weakest point of our case though there may be evidence of which I have not yet been made aware. The second reason is that since this is a request we ought to put up a figure in the hope of bargaining for a lower one.

10. As an illustration of the weakness of our argument in relating potential migrants to a relatively small increase in capital exportable by migrants, you will have received my despatch No. 2340,† which indicates that a sample of 530 U.K. migrants to Australia took out an average of £147. This is indirect (albeit incomplete) evidence that Australia is not competing with Canada if capital exports by individual emigrants are at issue. The manager of the West End Branch of the Royal Bank reported on October 5th that the average annual capital exports of U.K. migrants to Canada handled by his branch for the first nine months of this year was £125, or half the permissible amount. He also said that since June 26th his branch has handled about 80 applications for export of amounts up to £1000 in the first year, and all applications which his bank sent forward have been approved. On the other hand, it is also significant that no applicants to his branch in the last eighteen months or so, have shown capital of between £3000 and £5000 as was previously the case. This evidence does point out that we ought not to approach the United Kingdom Government formally for a specific lifting of capital export restrictions unless we can obtain some estimate, based on interviews, of the numbers of persons who have been prevented from going to Canada because of the restrictions of £1000.

11. The immigration officers concerned and members of my staff have examined this matter attentively for more than a week now. They conclude that if a formal approach is to be made to the United Kingdom Government to ascertain positively if it favours U.K. migration to Canada, and is willing to help by agreeing to some lifting of restrictions, it ought to be made by me to Gordon-Walker and it ought to carry the Canadian Government's judgment. An aide-mémoire, which might be left with Gordon-Walker, was accordingly drafted for your consideration and is attached.

12. If you agree that this matter is to be raised formally with the United Kingdom Government and we ought not to mention a specific figure, we may later be asked for suggestions as to the new upward limit. We might suggest orally that it might prove of material help if the limit were raised for heads of families to £2000 spread over four years, in addition to the administrative relaxations announced on June 20, 1950. The other alternative would be to suggest that, in view of the improved gold-dollar position of the United Kingdom (and notwithstanding the freeing of the Canadian dollar) the dollar equivalent of the sterling which an emigrant is allowed to take out should be restored to the pre-sterling devaluation amount of about $4000 spread over four years. The potential dollar drain would not be very great. At all events, it might be orally suggested that on grounds of comity and the avoidance of increased discrimination, (particularly in view of the recent liberalization in respect of O.E.E.C. migrants) that this liberalization ought to be granted to Canada.

13. You will be interested to know that, in connection with the recent announcement on the U.K. dollar position, the Times of October 4 had this to say in its first leader:

"The time has come to look into the varied assortment of personal items — the right of emigrants (especially to Canada) to take funds with them, the remittance of legacies, the use of sterling funds for their owners' personal expenses when in this country and the like — which breed an amount of difficulty and ill-feeling quite out of proportion to the dollars they save. The case for more kindly treatment of those dollar imports which have been treated with exceptional severity in the past, such as timber, newsprint, and certain Canadian fruit and dairy produce, is strong."

14. I might add that should the Canadian Government agree to make a formal approach of this nature, you or your colleagues may wish to mention it to Gaitskell during the course of his impending visit to Ottawa.

15. I would be obliged if you would say whether you wish formal representations to be made to the Commonwealth Relations Office on the subject of immigration and the form in which you would like them made. I am not unmindful of the fact that the Ontario Government has approached the United Kingdom authorities to discuss ways and means of increasing migration to Canada by lowering costs under the Empire Migration Act of 1922. (The answer which will be made shortly by the U.K. authorities is that they, by custom, must negotiate with the Canadian Government any of the matters covered by this Act).

[PIÈCE JOINTE/ENCLOSURE]

Projet d'un aide-mémoire

Draft Aide-mémoire

[London], October 6, 1950

The Canadian Government's policy in respect of immigration in the last few years has been to foster the growth of Canada's population by the encouragement of immigration through legislation and vigorous administration to ensure the careful selection and permanent settlement of such numbers of immigrants as can be advantageously absorbed in the national economy. Immigration to Canada, however, should not have the effect of altering the fundamental character of the Canadian population.

In the implementation of the policy, the Canadian Government created a new department of Citizenship and Immigration under the direction of a Cabinet Minister. Migration to Canada has been opened, broadly speaking, to all persons likely to become readily adapted to Canadian conditions and to be useful citizens. As an example the Government has gone so far as to allow any German citizen, with certain security safeguards, access to Canada for permanent residence. In April 1950, the period of qualification for family allowances has been reduced from three years' to one year's residence. Immigration rules are being simplified to reduce to a minimum the formalities required of settlers.

The Canadian Government also considers that the absorptive capacity of Canada is such, at the present time, that it is prepared (notwithstanding the seasonal vagaries of employment and the housing situation) to accept settlers during the winter months. It has accordingly sent the newly-appointed Director of Immigration, Mr. C.E.S. Smith, to Europe with the urgent mission of surveying the situation in the British Isles and in Western Europe, of reporting on ways and means to increase the overall flow of settlers from Europe to Canada and of taking such steps as are open to him now to increase the flow of emigrants from Europe.

The Canadian Government is acutely aware that the numbers of settlers from the British Isles has dropped considerably. The latest figures illustrating this fall are:

Year	Total	Non-British	British	% British to Total
1945	22,722	8,045	14,677	64.6
1946	71,719	20,311	51,408	71.7
1947	64,129	25,380	38,747	60.4
1948	125,414	79,357	46,057	36.7
1949	95,217	73,016	22,201	23.3
1950	44,010	36,065	7,945	18.0
(7 months)
1950	(75,718)	(62,074)	(13,644)	(18.0)

As the United Kingdom Government knows, Canada has traditionally accorded preference to migrants from the British Isles. The Canadian Government is most anxious that the proportion of settlers from these Isles shall be maintained and it has reason to believe that this view is shared by the United Kingdom Government.

A number of factors impede the flow of British migration to Canada. Among these are the shipping costs, reduced immigration publicity, Canadian duty on settlers' effects and the restriction on transferable funds. The Canadian authorities are examining what steps can be taken to reduce shipping costs. They propose to increase publicity for migration in the United Kingdom (inter alia) and hope that the United Kingdom Government will welcome this step being taken. The Canadian Government is considering also the question of customs' treatment to be accorded to settlers' effects.

Though statistics are not available in Canada or in the United Kingdom on this point, reports from Canadian Immigration officers throughout the British Isles indicate that one of the main deterrents to prospective migrants who would come forward, is the limitation on transferable funds. The welcome administrative relaxations by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on June 20, 1950, have been productive of results in some cases. However, the majority must rely on the sum of £250 per annum, which, in the case of heads of families, is insufficient under Canadian conditions to ensure adequate chances of success in the delicate operation of transplanting whole families to new surroundings.

The Canadian Government therefore feels that the limitation in question should be mitigated, at least for heads of families, as a complementary measure to the administrative relaxations announced on June 20, 1950. The Canadian authorities are not unmindful that when the limitation on capital exports by emigrants was reduced from £5,000 to £1,000, the critical dollar position of the United Kingdom made such action imperative. It is felt, however, that an increase at this time, without imposing too heavy a drain on United Kingdom resources of dollars, would (as the course of events of recent years has shown) provide some insurance for the United Kingdom and would lead to the desired increase in the number who will be able to emigrate to Canada.

The Canadian Government, accordingly, seeks to ascertain the views of the United Kingdom Government on the following points:

(a) Whether the United Kingdom Government agrees with the desirability of encouraging general emigration from the United Kingdom to Canada at the present time and would welcome the Canadian Government taking such steps as may be appropriate, in the United Kingdom, to that end.

(b) Whether the United Kingdom Government would agree to raise the limitation on transferable funds for heads of families at least, in addition to the administrative relaxations announced on June 20, 1950.

LETTER NO. 958 Paris, October 9, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

STIMULATION OF MIGRATION FROM WESTERN EUROPE

In view of the close schedule under which they were operating, Mr. Smith, the Director of Immigration, and his assistant, Mr. Benoit, were able to spend only October 2 and October 3 in Paris. After preliminary talks at the Embassy a meeting was arranged with the interested French authorities at the Quai d'Orsay in the late afternoon of October 2. The Minister together with Mr. [O.] Cormier, the Immigration Attaché, and Mr. Stoner accompanied Mr. Smith and Mr. Benoit to this meeting. The French officials including MM. de Beaumont, Director of the American Division of the Foreign Office, Charles-Roux of the same Division, Serres and [Charles] Colonna[-Césari] of the Division of Administrative and Social Affairs of the Foreign Office (which is responsible for immigration questions insofar as they concern the Foreign Office), Rosier, Director of Manpower in the Ministry of Labour, and Wolf, Director of Health in the Ministry of Population.

2. The Minister briefly opened the discussions on behalf of Canada and then turned them over to Mr. Smith, who outlined the purpose of his visit. He explained that he and Mr. Benoit were visiting France in an effort to implement the Canadian Government's policy of encouraging increased immigration of suitable persons from Western Europe. As one of the basic principles of this policy, the Canadian Government was anxious to retain the traditional ethnic balance in its population and for this reason there was particular interest in immigration from France. On the other hand the Canadian Government appreciated the French position with regard to loss of population and recognized that France did not regard herself as a country of emigration. Mr. Smith gave assurance that there was no desire on the part of his Government to encourage mass emigration from France. It was his hope, however, that the French authorities would have no objection if reliable information concerning possibilities of immigration to Canada were made available to any who showed themselves to be genuinely interested. He hoped, further, that one of his trained officers might have the opportunity of discussing these possibilities at first hand with all concerned.

3. The French authorities were extremely cordial and demonstrated much less rigid thinking in the matter of emigration from France to Canada than had been anticipated by the Canadian Immigration Service. M. Wolf of the Ministry of Population underlined the chronic shortage of population which had developed in France largely as a result of the past two wars. On the other hand his Department was prepared to offer encouragement to any determined emigrants that they should select Canada as a first choice amongst available areas. From certain of the rural areas in Normandy, Britanny, Alsace and the Pays-Basque where there was now a limited but definite tendency towards emigration because of local over-population, and Wolf volunteered the names of a number of local authorities and private groups with whom the Canadian Immigration Officer might establish contact in connection with potential agricultural emigrants.

4. M. Rosier speaking for the Ministry of Labour gave comparable assurances concerning industrial emigration. He offered the names of interested groups which Mr. Smith's representative might approach and he also suggested that opportunities in Canada might be listed in the placement section of the official publication of his Department which corresponds roughly to the Canadian Labour Gazette.

5. The rigid regulations of the French Government concerning the export of capital have always been a limitation on emigration from this country to Canada. At the present time emigrants are limited to $300.00 each in transferable funds. M. de Beaumont indicated that French financial authorities were reviewing an earlier Canadian request to alleviate this situation, and he gave reason to hope that there would be a substantial increase in the amount of funds which settlers might transfer to Canada. For the moment the French authorities are not able to give any definite figures in this regard, but there was a clear suggestion that a concrete and favourable reply to the Canadian request would very shortly be sent to the Embassy.

6. The French authorities pointed out that in certain cases their immigration arrangements with foreign countries are governed by bilateral agreements. Such an arrangement seemed to be scarcely necessary in the case of Canada although it might be necessary to proceed on such a basis if a substantial movement resulted after the visit of Mr. Smith's representative to France.

7. Up to the present Mr. Cormier, the Immigration Attaché, has not found it easy to establish direct contact with a number of the French government departments and agencies which are concerned with immigration matters. During the meeting the officials present indicated that such direct contact was feasible and at the conclusion of the meeting Mr. Cormier made arrangements to proceed on this basis. However, during the meeting itself there was no actual discussion of any of the mechanical difficulties which Mr. Cormier had been experiencing concerning the unavailability of police records or the difficulties of securing necessary publicity.

8. At the conclusion of the meeting Mr. Smith felt that it was evident that the French authorities were prepared to give a blessing in principle to a limited scale of emigration to Canada provided we were prepared to cooperate on a reasonable basis. As a result of this meeting he seemed assured that both the task of Mr. Cormier and the special representative who would be arriving from Canada in mid-October would become a good deal easier and more effective.

9. It is doubtful if for the present it would be wise to undertake an extensive programme of publicity on the basis suggested in para. 6 of your letter of September 21.† Through the medium of the Labour Gazette and by direct access to various interested groups the Canadian Immigration officials in France may be able to achieve the necessary results without creating unnecessary publicity which could understandably embarrass the French in their emigration policy towards other foreign countries. Announcements of the availability of a travelling special representative, placed in the local papers, may be found desirable from our point of view and agreeable to the French authorities. In general, however, it seems the course of wisdom to proceed with some caution in matters of publicity and to develop the close relations with the French authorities that were offered to us at the meeting.

I. IMMIGRATION; TRANSFER OF FUNDS FROM THE UNITED KINGDOM; POLICY ON FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR IMMIGRANTS

1. The Chairman referred to discussion at the meeting of June 23 at which it had been recommended that an effort be made to have the United Kingdom raise the limit of funds transferable by immigrants from £1,000 to £2,000. This matter had been taken up by the High Commissioner in London with officials of the U.K. government who had expressed the view that the limitation on capital transfers was not a substantial factor in the decline of movement of U.K. immigrants to Canada. Since that time, an examination had been made of capital taken by emigrants to Australia, where there was no limitation, and it indicated that out of 530 cases examined only 23 possessed £1,000 or more. The average per applicant was £157. Officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration had recently gone to Europe to investigate possible means of stimulating immigration and were anxious that a renewed approach should be made to the U.K. government on the limitation of capital transfers. The High Commissioner had submitted a draft aide mémoire which he thought might be left with the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations if it were approved and if a further attack on the U.K. government seemed desirable.

(I.C.E.T.P. Document No. 80† and attached despatches Nos. 2108†, 2340† and 2376 from London).

In view of the evidence submitted by the U.K. in earlier discussions, it seemed doubtful whether there was enough to be gained from an increase in the level of transferable funds to make it worthwhile to tackle the question again at the ministerial level unless the request could be linked with some new measure by the Canadian government to stimulate immigration generally.

2. The Deputy Minister of Finance said that he doubted whether the evidence adduced from an examination of Australian immigration figures was very conclusive. It appeared probable that an increase in allowed capital transfers would encourage some people to come to Canada who were not now coming and who had capital that could be used to establish small businesses. It would be desirable to assist such persons to move but it had to be realized that the number would not have any substantial effect on the general decline in immigration.

3. The Governor of the Bank of Canada suggested that any approach on the question of capital transfers should be made on the basis of removal of discrimination against Canada. There were a number of forms in which discrimination was now taking place as compared with the treatment for soft currency countries and of these the limitation on immigrant transfers was only one. An approach on a more general front would make it possible to know what weight should be given to each in the argument.

4. Mr. Plumptre was of the of the opinion that the estimate given by the U.K. officials of the probable cost to the United Kingdom in additional dollar outlay of an increase in transfers from £1,000 to £2,000, namely £5 to £10 million per year, was unduly large. He was inclined to agree that it would not be desirable now and in isolation to go at the limit of capital transfers but it might be worth while to have Canada House make further enquiry as to the basis of the £5 to £10 million figure. It would also be useful to know how they estimated the extent of loss as between out-flow to the United States and Canada.

5. The Deputy Minister of Citizenship and Immigration said that the central point was that immigration from the United Kingdom to Canada in the first eight months of 1950 was down by 47.4% from the same period in 1949. The comparable figures were 9,000 in 1950 as compared with 17,120 in 1949. The department had kept two types of immigration in mind: immigration of persons seeking employment and immigration of persons who might create employment. For the latter, immigration from the United Kingdom was likely to be the most suitable. There was no problem of language; adaptability was greater and assimilation was much easier. It was felt that movement of persons of this type would be considerably helped if the level of capital transfers was raised. The evidence adduced from the position of emigrants to Australia was not satisfactory. It was known that many persons who were desirous to coming to Canada did not even approach the Bank of England or commercial banks or transportation companies because they were well aware of the limitation on the funds they could take. It appeared from recent conversations that the French government was willing to relax some of its regulations and the Belgian government had indicated willingness to allow $1,000 per individual to be taken.

6. The Secretary submitted a memorandum† concerning the general policy of the Canadian government in relation to financial assistance for immigrant movement. The matter had been before the Committee in November 1949 at which time it was recommended to the Cabinet that apart from a possible advance of funds against subsequent immigrant transfers, "no additional measures of financial provision should be made". Since that time the economic situation in Canada had altered considerably and the absorptive capacity of the country was substantially higher. At the same time, the decline in immigration had gone on and was now more clearly established as a continuing trend. If the policy of the government remained that of encouraging immigration up to the limit of absorptive capacity, it seemed apparent that something new had to be added to the measures presently being taken. It did not seem probable that the level of immigration would be substantially affected by the number of immigrants having over £1,000. On the whole it seemed that the major limiting factor was the cost of passage. In the circumstances, it might be desirable to consider:

(a) The possibility of devising a plan under which persons in Canada could act as sponsors for immigrants and receive government-guaranteed loans either to the amount of the cost of passage or to a figure not related to that cost, the obligation to repay being either primarily that of the immigrant or the sponsor or a joint one.

(b) The possibility of taking advantage of an apparent slackening in pressure on ocean space, at least at certain times and on certain vessels, to provide cut-rate fares under government sponsorship. A direct subsidy on immigrant fares would probably not be desirable. However, it might be feasible for the government to take a firm bloc of space on certain vessels in off periods and got a much lower rate than the usual commercial one. This could be sold at cost to immigrants and the government stand any loss on unused space. Alternatively the government could charter vessels for a number of voyages and sell space at or below cost.

7. The Chairman said that he thought there were political objections to any policy of direct assistance for immigrant movement. For these reasons there might be advantage in some sort of loan plan related to sponsorship. The system of sponsors would provide assistance in settlement and would help in overcoming certain of the social problems of immigration. In connection with this matter, the Deputy Minister of Labour had recently advised that there were openings for 600-1000 domestics per month and had enquired as to the possibility of a direct advance of passage money. Mr. MacNamara thought there might be organizations that would advance loans if government guarantees were forthcoming. Consideration of assisted passages raised the question whether more attention should not be given to Italian immigration. Population pressures there were great and Italian immigrants were more likely to be of a type that could be assimilated into French Canada as readily as into the rest.

8. The Deputy Minister of Finance thought that the administrative problems connected with a loan system were so substantial as to make such a policy undesirable. On the other hand it might be possible to work out a practical plan to give lower cost passages. It would be well worth while to examine the proposal with a view to submitting a definite recommendation to the Cabinet.

9. The Deputy Minister of Citizenship and Immigration said that it was important that any plan for cheaper passages should not bring about a shift of immigration policy to one of "mass immigration". There might be something that could be done in connection with off-season movement since it was now possible to accept immigrants at any time of the year. The Settlement Service had reported that there would be 40,000 places available for next year which, on an average might absorb 120,000 settlers. In connection with the possibility of making loans, it might be worthwhile investigating whether the railways would be interested in advancing funds on a government-guaranteed basis. They had offices across the country to handle the administrative aspects and they were also interested in immigration both from the point of view of settlement and transportation.

10. The Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce was of the opinion that it would be desirable to look into the possibility of giving assistance on transportation. It would be desirable to see what could be done along these lines before making any further approach to the U.K. government on the question of capital transfers.

11. The Committee after further discussion, agreed:

(a) that the High Commissioner in London be informed that it was not considered desirable at the present time to make a further approach to the U.K. government at the ministerial level on the question of the limitation on transfers of capital by immigrants to Canada or to submit the draft aide mémoire but that renewed discussions might be desirable at a later date, after consideration had been given to other aspects of assistance to immigration;

(b) that the High Commissioner also be asked to enquire further as to the basis of the U.K. estimate on the dollar out-flow resulting from an increase in the level of capital transfers from £1,000 to £2,000 and, if possible, to provide a breakdown — showing the estimated out-flow to Canada and to the United States; and

(c) that a committee consisting of the Deputy Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, representatives of External Affairs, Labour and Finance, and the Secretary examine further the desirability of recommending to the Cabinet any plan to bring about a reduction in the cost of passage for immigrants moving from Europe to Canada.

IMMIGRATION; GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE RE TRANSPORTATION

23. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration reported that immigration to Canada had been steadily declining since 1948, when the total number of immigrants was 125,414. In 1949, the total was 95,217 and it was estimated that it would drop to 75,000 in 1950. While there were a number of factors operating to produce the decline, it was felt that a major cause was the cost of passage to Canada. It had been the Government's policy thus far not to provide any subsidy on immigrant fares or otherwise to extend direct financial assistance to encourage immigration. If, however, it was intended to bring to Canada as many immigrants as the country could absorb, it seemed that the principle of providing no financial assistance might have to be departed from to some extent.

It was therefore suggested that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration be authorized to ascertain whether the Georgic, now owned by the British Government and not completely reconverted to peacetime use, could be obtained for one year for the purpose of providing readily available accommodation for immigrants between the United Kingdom and Halifax or Quebec. This ship could carry approximately 1,400 passengers and it was suggested that fares might be set as low as possible in view of the ship's austerity accommodation and space sold on a straight commercial basis with priority to immigrants.

It was further recommended that the Aorangi, which would shortly be removed from the Canada-New Zealand run, might also be made available for a similar purpose. This ship, which could only carry 485 passengers, did not seem as suitable as the Georgic but the department might be authorized to enquire whether it might be secured, if desired, and on what basis.

Since transportation costs seemed to be a serious deterrent to prospective immigrants, approval was sought for a plan whereby female domestic servants and skilled tradesmen could made a down-payment on ocean fares of only £10, the balance to be repaid by the immigrant in regular instalments over a pre-determined period of time after arrival in Canada. Certain safeguards would be provided to ensure repayment of those balances.

It was also recommended that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration ascertain whether unused space aboard T.C.A. trans-Atlantic air-liners, particularly on wintertime flights, could also be made available to immigrants in the domestic service and skilled tradesmen groups on a similar down payment of £10, the difference between the down payments and normal ocean fares to be repaid in regular instalments by the immigrant after arrival in Canada and the difference between air and ocean fares to be absorbed by the government.

In addition to the girls for domestic service and the skilled tradesmen referred to, it was suggested that 500 displaced persons be brought to Canada before December 1st, 1950, for employment in lumber camps. For December, January, February and March, it was recommended that 500 men per month be brought forward to provide a reserve pool of manpower for general labour. It was also recommended that 50 men per month be admitted during the winter from Malta.

These proposals would provide direct assistance only for restricted categories of immigrants. If the venture were successful, it might be found desirable to extend similar assistance to other categories at a later date. In the meantime, it might be possible to interest the Canadian Pacific Railway and Canadian National Railways in administering a scheme whereby they would make advances on passages, provided the government were prepared to make funds available for this purpose at low interest rates.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Secretary's memorandum, Oct. 30, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 249-50)†

24. The Cabinet, after discussion:

(a) agreed that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration be authorized to ascertain on what basis the Georgic and the Aorangi could be chartered to provide transportation facilities for European immigrants;

(b) agreed that enquiries be made as to whether unused space aboard T.C.A. trans-Atlantic air-liners, particularly on wintertime flights, could be made available to certain classes of immigrants on deposit of a prescribed down-payment, the balance to be repaid by the immigrant and the government as recommended;

(c) approved in principle the proposal that girls for domestic service and skilled tradesmen be provided sea or air transportation on a down-payment of £10, the difference between such down-payment and ocean fares to be repaid by the immigrant and the difference between ocean and air fares to be absorbed by the government;

(d) authorized admission of the following groups during the winter months:

(i) 500 displaced persons to be admitted prior to December 1st, 1950, for employment in lumber camps;

(ii) 500 men per month for general labour purposes to be admitted in December, January, February and March;

(iii) 50 Maltese immigrants per month to be admitted during the winter;

(e) agreed that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration explore whether the Canadian Pacific and Canadian National Railways would be interested in operating a scheme under which advance passage fares could made to immigrants provided the government made funds available for this purpose at low interest rates.

IMMIGRATION; FREE ENTRY OF SETTLERS' EFFECTS

25. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, referring to discussion at the meeting of July 5th, 1950, said that the Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, after further consideration, had recommended, in the case of immigrants from countries applying exchange restrictions, that the regulations respecting settlers' effects be relaxed in order to make it easier for these immigrants to import more goods duty free for their own personal use.

The main features of the Committee's proposals were that the present six months ownership clause be waived in the case of immigrants from countries applying restrictions and that these immigrants be permitted to import a reasonable amount of additional settlers' effects for a period of two years from the date of their arrival. A formal certified declaration would be required showing the net worth of the immigrant's assets held in the country of origin. It was felt that the modified regulations should not apply retroactively.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Memorandum, Interdepartmental Committee on External Trade Policy, Sept. 22, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 224-50)†

26. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that regulations respecting settlers' effects be relaxed as recommended in so far as immigrants from countries applying exchange restrictions were concerned; Tariff Item 705 to be amended accordingly.

Refer your despatch 2376 of October 6, 1950, paragraph 3. Cabinet has approved exploratory conversations with a view to obtaining Georgic for westbound immigration from United Kingdom and France to Halifax and Quebec during winter and summer months respectively.

2. Our understanding of ownership position of Georgic is that she is owned by Ministry of Transport and operated on their behalf by Cunard White Star.

3. The kind of contract envisaged is somewhat similar to the former Aquitania deal:

(a) For a lump-sum consideration owners would guarantee keep vessel on run for period of one year;

(b) Owners would operate her and collect fares from passengers in usual way but all, repeat all, space would be at disposal of Immigration westbound;

(c) In view of fact vessel is still austerity rigged, it would be expected that owners would accept lower fare for westbound immigrant passengers than would normally prevail for commercial traffic.

4. We understand that [N.A.] Guttery, Deputy Secretary and [W.] Graham, Under-Secretary of Ministry of Transport, will be in Ottawa from November 8 to 10 and we would propose to open negotiations with them. It may be, however, that your local knowledge of situation with regard to Georgic makes it desirable for you [to] put matter to Ministry of Transport in London immediately. Alternatively, you may think it desirable to broach matter to Ministry and ask them instruct Guttery and Graham to discuss in Ottawa. Please wire what action, if any, you are taking.

Your No. 1713 November 4th. Georgic.

2. Smith and Benoit reported by cable† to their department on October 29th concerning their unsuccessful demarches in Liverpool on October 28th to sound out Cunard on Georgic. On October 27th we had advised them she was presently trooping on United Kingdom account and that United Kingdom wanted another trip for this purpose but that Australia, which had contributed to cost of Georgic, insisted she should be on Australian emigrant run before Christmas. This is being done and United Kingdom has abandoned any idea of using her for further trooping.

3. Nevertheless we mentioned to Sir Gilmour Jenkins [Permanent Secretary] of Ministry of Transport on November 6th Cabinet's interest in Georgic. He replied as above mentioning that she might be on North Atlantic next summer at which time arrangements might be made. (Some Ministry officials, basing themselves on information from American sources are not as sanguine as festival organizers concerning numbers likely to come from America to United Kingdom; they think there will be space available). We pointed out your interest in shipping this winter and enquired about Empress of Australia which is presently trooping. He said he would examine position but United Kingdom is much behind in its trooping programme. He will advise Guttery of your enquiry and brief him with any later information. Guttery and Graham, however, are very knowledgeable on this subject.

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], November 29, 1950

1. The scarcity of shipping available on the North Atlantic is a factor preventing immigrants from coming to Canada.

2. It is reported that Trans-Canada Airlines, on their flights west-bound from the United Kingdom, have a number of vacant seats which could be used for immigrants if it was not for prohibitive fare.

3. It is reported that the trans-Atlantic service of Trans-Canada Airlines operates at a deficit during the winter months.

4. Trans-Canada Airlines reports that there will be approximately 650 vacancies between now and the end of the calendar year and over 1,000 vacancies during the first three months of 1951.

5. Those vacancies could be used by immigrants and with advantage to Trans-Canada Airlines if the fare payable by immigrants did not exceed $160.00, which is equivalent to the cost of tourist class passage by sea.

6. Rates over the Atlantic being controlled by the International Air Transport Association, the difference between the cost of air transportation and ocean transportation would have to be paid by the Canadian Government.

The Undersigned, Therefore, Recommends That

The Department of Citizenship and Immigration be authorized to pay to Trans-Canada Airlines the difference in costs between air transportation and ocean transportation for every immigrant agreeing to travel by Trans-Canada Airlines between now and March 31, 1951.

No funds being available in the Estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration for this purpose, the necessary funds to be voted in Supplementary Estimates for the fiscal year 1950-51.[51]

Memorandum from Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to Cabinet

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 279-50 [Ottawa], December 9, 1950

FINANCIAL MEASURES TO ASSIST IMMIGRATION

1. A major factor in the decline of immigration since 1948 has been the high cost of passage to Canada.

2. It is reported that there is a strong possibility of extensive manpower shortage in 1951.

3. There is no longer a large number of immigrants eligible for assistance by the International Refugee Organization.

4. Special types of immigrants required by the Department of Labour cannot be secured without providing assistance with respect to transportation costs.

5. The Ontario Government has proposed to provide assisted passages to immigrants coming forward to employment with the Ontario Hydro.

6. Some employers have expressed a willingness to advance transportation costs on a refundable basis to immigrants in order to secure workers.

7. In order to obtain certain types of workers, it would appear that assisted passages are required.

8. While the granting of assistance on a piecemeal basis by the Federal or Provincial Governments, private organizations and individuals, may serve to satisfy some of the immediate needs of the Canadian labour market, it would involve discrimination against some better-type immigrants whose movement to Canada is highly desirable from the point of view of long-range immigration policy. The estimated movement of immigrants to Canada, referred to in Item 1 of Appendix A, will be prejudiced since immigrants will delay migration to Canada in the anticipation that the classes eligible for assistance will be broadened, or alternatively, may proceed to other countries offering assistance.

The Undersigned, Therefore, Recommends:

1. That the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration be authorized to advance part of the cost of transportation to immigrants, whose admission to Canada is sponsored by the Department of Labour or the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, when satisfied that the services of such immigrants are urgently required in Canada.

2. That such advances be made only to the heads of families or single persons who can contribute toward the cost of their transportation to Canada; such contribution to be not less than Thirty Dollars, or its equivalent.

3. That such advances be made only to immigrants who agree to accept employment with a Canadian resident upon arrival, and further agree to remain in this class of employment for a period of one year or until their debt to the Government is repaid, and sign authority under which their employer will deduct from their wages the instalments due on the fares so advanced.

4. That the amounts so advanced be collected by

(a) the Department of Labour for immigrants admitted under its sponsorship;

(b) the Department of Citizenship and Immigration for all others;

and all amounts thus collected be remitted to the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

5. That inland transportation in Canada, in the case of immigrants admitted for domestic service, be paid as is now the practice by the Canadian Government through the Department of Labour.

6. That the period over which advances will be collected shall be determined in relation to the immigrant's earnings in Canada but shall not exceed twenty-four months.

7. That expenditures made for transportation on behalf of immigrants be provided by way of a revolving fund.

8. That the moneys needed to finance the aforementioned scheme be provided for in the Supplementary Estimates of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration for the fiscal year 1950-51 and that the sum so provided be established at One Million Dollars.[52]

[APPENDICE A/APPENDIX A]

FINANCIAL MEASURES TO ASSIST IMMIGRATION

Since 1948, when the number of immigrants was 125,414, there has been a steady decline in immigration. In 1949 the total number of immigrants was 95,217 and in the first nine months of 1950 it was 54,250, as compared to 76,149 for the same period in 1949, a decrease of 28.8%. A major factor in this decline has been the high cost of passage to Canada. Australia and New Zealand, which provide assisted passages, have maintained a high level of immigration and are serious competitors in the immigration field. In view of the desirability of halting the decline in immigration, the following proposals, which have been considered by an Interdepartmental Committee including representatives of the Privy Council office, the Department of External Affairs, the Department of Finance, the Department of Labour, the Department of National Health and Welfare, the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, are submitted.

[52] Approuvé par le Cabinet, le 13 décembre, 1950./Approved by Cabinet, December 13, 1950.

I. Provisional Estimate of Emigration from Europe in 1951

1. As a result of his trip overseas, the Director of Immigration has made the following provisional estimate of the emigration movement from the United Kingdom and Europe during the calendar year 1951. This estimate based on a continuation of discernible trends at Immigration posts abroad; conversations with key government officials; representatives of transportation companies and other informed persons; and the Director's appraisal of the situation, is subject to review on February 1, 1951.

2. It has been reported that there exists in Canada a shortage of skilled tradesmen and certain other types of workers and that there is a strong probability of extensive manpower shortage in the Spring of 1951. The Settlement Service of the Immigration Branch reports that there exists thousands of vacancies and opportunities in Canada for immigrants. There should be little difficulty in securing placements for workers included in the above figures.

II. Assisted Passages

1. Formerly large numbers of skilled and unskilled workers were brought forward to Canada from Displaced Persons camps under bulk movements sponsored by the Department of Labour and transportation costs were paid by the International Refugee Organization. Increasing difficulty is being experienced in selecting workers who can meet Canadian requirements from the residue in I.R.O. camps. The I.R.O. will cease its activities before the end of 1951.

2. Special types of workers required by the Department of Labour cannot be secured without providing assistance with respect to transportation costs. Approval has been granted, in principle, to a proposal whereby girls for domestic service and skilled tradesmen may be provided sea or air transportation on a down payment of £10, the difference between such down payment and ocean fares to be repaid by the immigrant and the difference between ocean and air fares to be absorbed by the Government.

3. The Ontario Government has proposed to provide assisted passage to unskilled workers from the United Kingdom for employment with the Ontario Hydro. Since workers in this class are those least likely to be able to pay their own transportation costs, they cannot be otherwise secured unless some form of assisted passage is offered.

4. Some employers have expressed a willingness to advance transportation costs on a refundable basis to immigrants in order to secure workers.

5. It would appear that in order to obtain certain types of workers assisted passages would be necessary.

6. While the granting of assistance on a piecemeal basis by the Federal or Provincial Governments, private organizations and individuals may serve to satisfy some of the immediate needs of the Canadian labour market, it would involve discrimination against some better-type immigrants whose movement to Canada is highly desirable from the point of view of long-range immigration policy. The estimated movement of immigrants to Canada, referred to in Item 1 of this Appendix, will be prejudiced since immigrants will delay migration to Canada in the anticipation that the classes eligible for assistance will be broadened, or proceed to other countries offering assistance.

7. Taking all factors into consideration, it is evident that a programme for assisted passages on a refundable basis, provided by the Federal Government is indicated.

III. Estimate of Amount Required for a Revolving Fund

1. The following table is based on an estimate of the number of immigrants requiring assisted passage from each of the countries indicated:

Country	No. Assisted Passages	Total Cost	Cost less Contribution
United Kingdom	13,000	$2,600,000	$2,210,000
Austria & Germany	13,000	2,080,000	1,690,000
France	2,500	500,000	425,000
The Netherlands	2,000	420,000	360,000
Belgium	500	105,000	90,000
Italy	1,000	235,000	205,000
Denmark	500	105,000	90,000
Sweden	500	105,000	90,000
TOTAL	33,000	$6,150,000	$5,160,000

2. It is now estimated that One Million Dollars would be required for the establishment of a revolving fund.

TERMINATION OF THE STATE OF WAR

Note du secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le Cabinet

Memorandum from Secretary of State for External Affairs to Cabinet

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 225-50 [Ottawa], September 30, 1950

TERMINATION OF THE STATE OF WAR WITH GERMANY

On September 19, 1950, the Foreign Ministers of the United Kingdom, the United States and France, in a joint statement announced that, pending the unification of Germany which cannot be realized as long as the Soviet Union opposes free elections, "the three Governments have decided as soon as action can be taken in all three countries in accordance with their respective constitutional requirements to take the necessary steps in their domestic legislation to terminate the state of war with Germany. This action will not affect the rights and status of the three powers in Germany which rest upon other bases. It will, however, create a firmer foundation for the developing structure of peaceful and friendly relationships and will remove disabilities to which German nationals are subject. It is hoped that other nations will find it possible to take similar action in accordance with their own constitutional practices".

2. From an international point of view it now seems to be generally recognized that the war with the whole of Germany ceased to exist with the unconditional surrender of Germany and the assumption of supreme authority in Germany by the four powers in 1945. It, therefore, follows that the state of war continues to exist only in the realm of the domestic jurisdiction of the Allied Powers and to bring it to an end it will be necessary for these countries, including Canada, to take the necessary measures in accordance with their constitutional procedures.

3. The United Kingdom Foreign Office interprets the public statement of the three Foreign Ministers as meaning that the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and France should act simultaneously in terminating the state of war with Germany. It is also the view of the Foreign Office that immediate action by the United Kingdom Government is not likely because of the fact that the United States Government will require some time to review a considerable number of Acts of Congress which would be affected by the United States action.

4. All the Departments of the Government are being consulted concerning the effect which the termination of the state of war with Germany would have on the legislation administered by them. Consideration is also being given to the procedural steps to be taken to give effect to the termination of the war in Canada and the effective date of that termination.

5. Having regard to the desirability of bringing the Federal Republic of Germany into closer association with the community of free nations, I recommend that the Canadian Government announce now its intention to terminate the state of war with Germany as soon as it is in a position to do so without indicating the procedural steps that might be taken or the date on which the termination is to be made effective.[53]

Note de la Direction européenne pour le chef de la Direction européenne

Memorandum from European Division to Head, European Division

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], November 15, 1950

You will recall that the French, United Kingdom and United States Governments have decided to terminate the state of war with Germany at approximately the same time after an agreed date has been established through diplomatic channels. In separate memoranda† phrased in slightly different terms they have indicated to us that they would be glad if we would coordinate our action in terminating the state of war with theirs. So far we have advised them, through their representatives here, that we intend to terminate the state of war at an early date and that the detailed procedures involved are under consideration. We added that we should consider their request about the timing of our final action. We also stated that we were somewhat surprised that the first news which we had had of their Governments' decision was from the newspapers and that their request was not made until three weeks after the announcement.

The date of the action of the Western Powers will apparently be governed by the speed with which the United States is able to move. This in turn depends on the passage of the joint resolution by Congress. The latest information we have is that the resolution will probably not be presented to Congress until January, 1951.

The detailed procedures which we might adopt are still under consideration. Although Legal Division are pressing them, the Department of Justice have yet to determine whether Parliament must be consulted or whether a proclamation in the Canada Gazette would be sufficient. The question of the timing of our action may be affected by the ruling of the Department of Justice. If it is necessary to obtain Parliamentary approval, we shall not be free to act until some time after Parliament re-assembles in the New Year. If, on the other hand, a proclamation is sufficient, and the chances are that it will be, our choice of date will not be so restricted. In order to save time later on, it might perhaps be useful to clarify our thoughts now on the assumption that we shall resort to a proclamation to terminate the state of war.

It is relevant to note from Despatch No. 2729 of November 2, 1950,† from London, that at a recent meeting between the Heads of Delegations of the Intergovernmental Study Group on Germany and the Benelux representatives in London, the Foreign Office spokesman mentioned that he had heard rumours to the effect that some (unspecified) countries intended shortly to terminate the state of war with Germany unilaterally. He thought that it would be imprudent if they actually did so now, since this would place them in an anomalous position vis-à-vis both the Occupying Powers and the German Federal Government. He regarded the question as being of some urgency and asked the Benelux representatives to communicate to their Governments the views which he had expressed. His action, it appears, was prompted by information received by the Foreign Office that the Dutch were annoyed at what they considered to be a lack of liaison on this question and that they were contemplating taking action at an early date.

From The Hague we have now learned that the Netherlands Government has announced its intention to terminate the state of war. Its actual announcement concludes: "These (the Belgian and Luxembourg) Governments will also be consulted in due course regarding the moment at which the state of war with Germany will be declared to have ended. Since the determination of this moment is partly dependent upon what the Occupying Powers will do in this respect and particularly upon the measures which have to be taken in Germany itself beforehand, it is not possible now to give any further information on the matter". Despite their reported irritation, the Dutch apparently feel that they must be guided in part at least by what the Occupying Powers will do. It may be that they were impressed by the comment that they would be in a rather odd position if they proceeded on their own at this stage, in advance of the Occupying Powers.

While we, too, feel that the Occupying Powers might have given us some warning of their decision before it was announced, it would be unfortunate if we allowed ourselves to be governed by considerations of pique.[54] To terminate the state of war ahead of the Occupying Powers might convey the impression that we were indulging in tactics of retaliation. The question of coordinating our action with theirs should presumably be examined on its own merits. On balance there would appear to be nothing to lose and a little goodwill to gain by meeting their request, especially since we have already registered our surprise at the way in which they suddenly announced their decision in September.[55] Perhaps we should also remember that the Foreign Office at least kept Canada House fairly well informed of the progress made by the Intergovernmental Study Group.

We do not, of course, need to choose exactly the same date as the Occupying Powers. Indeed the French and United Kingdom memoranda only mentioned taking the step at about the same time as themselves. It might be better if our action were to stand out a little on its own. Perhaps both points of view would be met if we were to terminate the state of war very shortly after the Occupying Powers did so.[56] [57]

Legal Division has taken the first two steps suggested by Mr. Léger. London has undertaken to keep us informed. by special action but it seemed desirable to make a general provision for them. It was also desirable to extend somewhat the categories of German nationals whose admission was allowed because of relationship to persons resident in Canada. Of such German nationals, 3,051 had been admitted in 1948, 5,998 in 1949; and it was expected that 7,000 to 8,000 might come during the current year.

Alternative draft submissions were presented for consideration. "Draft A" was recommended for approval.

Copies of the drafts were circulated.

(Draft submissions to Council by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, Mar. 22, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 92-50)[59]

16. The Secretary of State for External Affairs suggested that the paragraph in "Draft A" concerning persons of ethnic origin who had become German nationals during the war was in rather general terms and left the implication that large numbers might be expected to come to Canada. It would be desirable either to amend it somewhat or to have it clearly explained that it was permissive in character and not a provision for general admission.

17. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, approved the submission of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, marked "Draft A", concerning admission of enemy aliens to Canada subject to amendment of paragraph (c) in the light of the discussion; an Order in Council to be passed accordingly on the basis of a new submission as amended.

It was proposed to make a brief statement later in the day and to table copies of the Order in Council in the House of Commons.

8. The Cabinet, after discussion, approved the recommendation of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and agreed that Order in Council P.C. 4850 of November 26th, 1947 be revoked and that an Order in Council be passed to prohibit the entry of enemy aliens into Canada provided that this should not exclude persons who had been opposed to an enemy government, specified relatives of persons legally resident in Canada or displaced persons or refugees of German ethnic origin who were not German nationals on September 1st, 1939.

It had been his intention to have such persons made admissible unless investigation showed that any such person had been an active Nazi or was otherwise undesirable for security reasons.

33. The Cabinet, after discussion, agreed that admissibility be extended to displaced persons or refugees of German ethnic origin who had not been German nationals on September 1st, 1939 notwithstanding service in the German armed forces, provided that no individual should be admitted who was found on examination to be undesirable for security or other reasons.

IMMIGRATION; REMOVAL OF GERMAN NATIONALS FROM CLASSES OF PROHIBITED ALIENS

15. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration said that, in the absence of a Peace Treaty with Germany, German nationals, with certain limited exceptions, were prevented from entering Canada by the provisions of Order in Council P.C. 1606 dated March 28th, 1950. The effect was to deprive Canada of substantial numbers of immigrants whose professional, technical or industrial skills would be likely to become loyal citizens. It was recommended that Germans be removed from the class of prohibited enemy aliens and considered on the same basis as other prospective immigrants.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Aug. 18, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 203-50)†

16. Mr. Harris said it appeared likely that in the near future an arrangement would be concluded so that Germans would no longer be classified as enemy aliens, despite the fact that no peace treaty had been signed. It might be well to defer any announcement of a new immigration policy with respect to Germans until this had been done.

17. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that, for the purposes of immigration, German nationals be removed from the class of prohibited enemy aliens and be considered on the same basis as other prospective immigrants; the announcement of such policy to be postponed pending satisfactory arrangements being made to classify German nationals as other than enemy aliens; an Order in Council to be passed accordingly.

Ottawa, le 28 décembre 1949

Monsieur l'Ambassadeur,

Lorsque vous m'avez rendu visite, le 1er décembre, nous avons examiné la possibilité d'instituer, entre la France et le Canada, un comité permanent des affaires économiques. Vous avez, par la suite, fait part de cette proposition à mon Ministre. Depuis, j'en ai causé avec divers fonctionnaires des autres ministères qui pourraient être intéressés.

2. La question est à l'étude depuis que M. Queuille[60] l'a soulevée, peu de temps après son arrivée, l'été dernier.

3. J'ai constaté que tous les fonctionnaires intéressés de notre Gouvernement seraient très heureux d'étudier des sujets déterminés avec des fonctionnaires de votre Gouvernement chaque fois que la chose semblerait souhaitable. Il nous serait tout à fait agréable de participer à des conversations propres à aplanir certaines difficultés et à favoriser les bons rapports entre nos deux pays. Dès que vous jugerez bon de nous indiquer une liste de sujets à examiner, nous nous empresserons de prendre des dispositions pour que des réunions puissent avoir lieu soit à Paris soit à Ottawa.

Pierre Queuille, Commercial Counsellor and Financial Attaché, Embassy of France.

4. Je crois me rappeler qu'au cours de l'entretien que nous avons eu dans mon bureau à ce sujet, vous avez suggéré que les fonctionnaires qui assisteront aux réunions du Comité permanent du Canada et du Royaume-Uni se rendent ensuite à Paris. À ce propos, je dois vous dire que la date de la prochaine réunion du Comité Canada-Royaume-Uni n'est pas encore fixée. Du reste, je ne crois pas qu'il serait nécessaire de subordonner aux réunions Canada-Royaume-Uni les réunions que vous proposiez.

5. Bien qu'ils accueillent avec faveur l'idée de réunions où seraient étudiés des sujets déterminés, nos fonctionnaires estiment, comme moi, qu'il n'est pas nécessaire de constituer un organisme permanent; peut-être même serait-il inopportun de procéder ainsi. Nous trouvons qu'il a été créé depuis la guerre un bien grand nombre d'organes officiels de consultation en matière économique; que ces organes entraînent déjà une grande dépense de temps et d'énergie; et que les consultations économique offrent moins de chances de succès lorsqu'elles sont menées sur le plan officiel, surtout si le caractère officiel des consultations donne lieu à une certaine publicité. Vous savez sans doute que la création du Comité Canada-Royaume-Uni n'est pas d'initiative canadienne. Il n'existe pas d'organisme analogue entre le Canada et les États-Unis. La plupart des comités économiques bilatéraux qui ont pris naissance depuis la guerre sont corrélatifs à des accords bilatéraux de commerce et de paiements; le Canada n'a conclu aucun accord de ce genre. Nous savons que si un comité Canada-France était créé, il est au moins un autre pays d'Europe qui insisterait immédiatement pour que le Canada établisse avec lui un comité semblable; je dirais même qu'un tel précédent nous obligerait en quelque sorte à constituer des comités économiques permanents avec plusieurs autres pays.

Un autre forme de consultation économique internationale nous semble se recommander à notre attention. Dans un discours qu'il a prononcé récemment à la Chambre des communes, le Secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures a donné à entendre que nous étudions les possibilités qu'offre à cet égard l'article 2 du Pacte de l'Atlantique. Mais c'est là une question que nous aimerions étudier avec vous lorsque nos vues en l'espèce seront plus précises.

Veuillez agréer, Monsieur l'Ambassadeur, les assurances de ma très haute considération.

DESPATCH 54 Paris, January 24, 1950

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose copy of a letter from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs which refers to the setting up of a joint Franco-Canadian committee on foreign trade policy. This subject was discussed by M. Schuman and Mr. Howe in Ottawa and was raised once more by M. Schuman when he saw our Minister in Paris. The Government of France places considerable importance on the establishment of such a committee and Mr. Howe believes the project is desirable from the viewpoint of Canada.

Mr. Howe suggests that the Committee be founded along the lines of the United Kingdom-Canada Committee on trade policy, that the Canadian Ambassador to France be Chairman at the Paris meetings and that the Ambassador of France at Ottawa be Chairman for Canadian meetings. He proposes also that Mr. James Manion be made a member of the Committee for meetings in France and the French Trade Commissioner M. Queuille for meetings in Canada.

He believes that other appropriate representatives would be either Mr. Mackenzie or Mr. Beaupré of Trade and Commerce in addition to an official from Agriculture and one from Finance.

As the French Government view the matter as one of urgency, Mr. Howe expresses the hope that an early and favourable reply will be given to this request.

I have, etc.

Au cours de l'entretien, en date du 19 janvier 1950, que le Président R. Schuman, Ministre des Affaires Étrangères a eu avec le Très Honorable C.D. Howe, Ministre du Commerce du Canada, et conformément aux vues que les deux Ministres avaient précédemment échangées à Ottawa en Octobre 1949, l'institution, dans les plus brefs délais, d'un Comité Mixte Franco-Canadien a été reconnue désirable.

Ce Comité serait chargé d'étudier, à intervalles réguliers, les problèmes relatifs au commerce entre les deux pays et de proposer aux deux Gouvernements les mesures propres à son développement.

Le Gouvernement français étant d'accord avec cette proposition, le Ministère des Affaires Étrangères serait reconnaissant à l'Ambassade du Canada de bien vouloir lui faire connaître, aussitôt qu'il Lui sera possible, la décision que Son Gouvernement aura prise à ce sujet.

Your despatch No. 54 of January 24 — Franco-Canadian Trade Committee.

1. A group of Canadian officials will visit Paris to explore this subject with the French authorities. Our group will be led by Sydney Pierce, Associate Deputy Minister of Trade and Commerce, assisted by Deutsch (Finance), Couillard (External) and possibly Isbister (Trade and Commerce). In the absence of Manion, Gauthier[61] might sit in on the discussions.

2. We want to do whatever we can to promote Franco-Canadian trade and believe that meetings between the right officials at the right times should be helpful. On the other hand we want to avoid unprofitable meetings and unnecessary trans-Atlantic journeys. Further, we are worried that if we set up a formal committee with regular meetings with the French we will have to make similar arrangements with a number of other countries; the Belgians have already approached us. Hence the coming meeting in France is to explore the best ways of meeting the needs of our two countries. It should not (repeat not) be regarded as the first meeting of a formal or permanent committee.

3. Pierce can be in Paris towards the end of March or at any time during the first three weeks of April. We are cabling to Deutsch, Couillard (and Isbister) who are attending GATT in Geneva to suggest to you a convenient date for the meeting.

My telegram No. 132 of March 27th.† Franco-Canadian economic meetings.

1. Talks took place on April 4th and 5th. We were represented as follows:
Trade and Commerce: Pierce, Isbister and Gauthier
External Affairs: Macdonnell and Couillard
Finance: Deutsch.

2. It soon became apparent that the French request for a continuing trade promotion Committee had not been based on any clear conception of what such a committee might usefully do. We explained that we had no committee of this type with any other country because we did not feel that a formal committee mechanism was appropriate to deal with day to day problems the solution of which lay so largely in the hands of private endeavour, supported by existing Government facilities. We explained further that the United Kingdom-Canadian committee was not primarily a trade promotion committee; it had been created essentially to deal with problems peculiar to United Kingdom-Canadian relations.

3. It was felt however that officials could usefully meet from time to time, on a non-formal basis as in the present talks, to discuss practical problems in a general way and to review progress in the development of trade. It was the hope of both sides that such another meeting could be arranged about September probably in Paris. If the French maintain their interest in such discussions we would recommend that a small team be made available, possibly from our delegation to Torquay. We make this recommendation because the French have met our point of view and have not insisted on their request for the creation of a formal continuing committee.

4. It was agreed that while private endeavour must make the going (and the primary need was for energetic French salesmanship) Governments could do a good deal in the way of providing information and studying market possibilities. Denis Harvey when he was here explained the services which the Import Division of Trade and Commerce could provide in this connection. We followed by suggesting that specific commodity studies could be made and this was warmly received. We will send you shortly a minute of the proceedings which will specify a number of commodities on which the French would welcome such studies.

5. It was also arranged that the Embassy and particularly the commercial section would give the French all possible assistance.

6. Both sides understood that trade between the two countries should develop in a normal commercial manner and could not depend upon exclusive or discriminatory arrangements.

FRANCO-CANADIAN TRADE TALKS

1. The second round of informal trade talks with French officials took place on October 9 and 10. You will recall that the first such meetings were held in April, 1950, and that it was agreed at that time that it would be useful for officials to meet periodically to discuss practical problems in a general way and to review progress in the development of trade.

2. The Canadian group was headed by Mr. Pierce and included Messrs. Macdonnell, Manion, Deutsch, Isbister, Couillard and Stoner. The French group was led by Mr. [Pierre] Charpentier who has recently replaced M. Alphand as [Director-General] of the Economic Division in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, and included officials from the Ministries of Finance, Commerce, Overseas France, and other agencies concerned with trade with Canada.

3. The meetings were businesslike and directed entirely to the discussion of practical problems. On the French side there was full recognition of the fact that if French exports to Canada are to be expanded it is necessary for French exporters to take the necessary steps to interest customers in a free and open market. There were no suggestions, as there had been at the first round of talks in April, that the Canadian Government might in some way intervene to secure for France a larger share in Canadian markets. On the Canadian side we said that we were disappointed to note the drop in French exports to Canada (while their exports to the United States had risen) and suggested that perhaps French exporters had not fully realized what changes had taken place in the Canadian market and what new opportunities had developed.

4. Various commodities were then discussed and views were exchanged as to the most practical ways in which French exporters could overcome difficulties in each field, whether caused by questions of price, communications, representation, market research, and so so. The Commercial Secretary is reporting in detail to the Department of Trade and Commerce on these discussions.

5. The French authorities expressed an interest in continuing these talks periodically and the Canadian group agreed that such discussions were of value to both sides. It was arranged that the next meetings would be held in Ottawa (which was suggested by the French) and it was left to the French authorities to suggest a date. They indicated that they would probably propose a date in the spring of 1951.

6. During his visit to Paris Mr. Deutsch, accompanied by Mr. Macdonnell, had a discussion with the French financial authorities on the subject of reaching a final settlement on Military Relief Credits, and the general lines of his proposal proved most acceptable to the French. Mr. Deutsch will be reporting on these discussions to the Department of Finance and it is expected that they will be continued in Ottawa. It should be possible to reach final agreement in the fairly near future.[62]

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 125-50 [Ottawa], April 26, 1950

SETTLEMENT OF CANADIAN WAR CLAIMS AGAINST ITALY; RELEASE OF ITALIAN ASSETS HELD BY THE CUSTODIAN

Canadians with war claims against Italy have filed them with the Secretary of State's Department in response to advertisements published in November, 1948. It is believed that all claims have now been filed (with the possible exception of a few very minor ones). They are as follows:

(a) Aluminum Secretariat Ltd.	$1,360,000	(approx.)
(b) Government of Newfoundland	256,000	"
(c) About 175 other Claimants	684,000	"
Total	$2,300,000	"

Some of these claims are payable in lire, some in sterling and some in dollars. The above figures represent the total of claims filed. Many of them will have to be written down either because they are not legally valid or because the facts, when investigated, will not justify them.

2. Under the Treaty of Peace with Italy the Italian assets held by the Canadian Custodian may, if necessary, be used to settle Canadian claims against Italy. The total of these assets is at present estimated to be about $3.5 millions. This represents the book value of the assets; if they had to be liquidated to meet claims the amount realized might be substantially less. However, it appears that there is a substantial excess of assets over claims.

Italian Proposals

3. Since the Peace Treaty was signed in 1947 the Italian authorities have been asking for release of Italian assets. Most recently, in January, 1950, they have proposed that we should immediately proceed to release all these assets.[63] At the same time Canadian claims would be submitted to the Italian authorities for screening and eventual payment. Machinery has been set up in Rome for dealing with claims from the United States and the United Kingdom. Similar machinery would be set up for Canadian claims.

4. This proposal cannot be considered satisfactory. The United States and the United Kingdom are most dissatisfied with the difficulties and delays that their claimants have encountered in Rome and have been protesting in vigorous terms. If all the Italian assets held by our Custodian were released, Canadian claimants would have no protection against similar unsatisfactory treatment.

A Lump-Sum Settlement

5. Canadian officials have been pressing for a lump-sum settlement. Under this the Italian Government would be asked to pay the Canadian Government immediately a lump-sum roughly covering the total of valid Canadian claims. In return the Canadian Custodian would immediately proceed to release all Italian assets. Such a settlement was authorized by Cabinet on May 3, 1949 (see Cabinet Document of May 2, 1949 attached†). Canadian claimants are likely to receive better protection under such a settlement than under any other. It would also avoid prolonged delays and substantial costs of administration.

6. The Canadian officials concerned are agreed that one more attempt should be made to reach a lump-sum settlement. This attempt will be made when Mr. Charles Stein, Under-Secretary of State, visits Rome in the near future. The Italian Ambassador here is known to be personally unsympathetic towards a lump-sum settlement. It is hoped that discussions in Rome may bring greater success. On the other hand the Italian authorities may remain unwilling to make any settlement with Canada that differs materially from settlements already made in the United States and the United Kingdom.

7. It is desirable to set minimum amounts that would be acceptable in a lump-sum settlement. The following figures show on the one hand the maximum amount of our total claims and the minimum amounts that can be asked for if our demands are to include only claims that are virtually unchallengeable both in law and on the basis of the facts of each individual case.

Maximum	Minimum
Claims in Canadian Dollars	$950,000	$150,000
Claims in Sterling	£ 62,525	£ 62,525
Claims in Lire	700 million	600 million

It should be pointed out that the lump-sum would be paid partly in lire (and in sterling). There is a possibility of loss to the Canadian Government if the lire (or sterling) depreciates between the time the money is received and the time it is paid out to Canadian claimants. It may take two years to review all Canadian war claims.

8. In connection with our minimum claims one further concession might be offered to the Italians. We might agree to hand back to them any residue of the lump sum that remained over and above the total of Canadian claims against Italy when these had been finally screened and validated by Canadian authorities.

Compromise Number One

9. This compromise would consist of two steps:

(a) The Italians would first implement the separate agreement on military relief. It will be recalled that an agreement has been approved under which they will pay the Canadian Government lire in cash and bonds amounting to $1.3 millions (U.S.) in discharge of claims of $28 millions. They are delaying this payment pending agreement with us on the release of Italian assets held by our Custodian.

(b) Canadian claims would then be officially submitted to the Italian authorities for payment. As claims were paid assets would be released by our Custodian; $3.00 worth of assets or more could be released for every $2.00 worth of claims met.

Under this compromise our claims would always be more than fully covered by the assets we were holding and the Italians would have a substantial incentive to pay claims. On the other hand the piecemeal release of claims under this formula would involve difficulties for our Custodian, and the Italians, who have been pressing hard for the immediate release of a substantial bloc of assets, are not very likely to accept it.

Compromise Number Two

10. This compromise also consists of two steps:

(a) The Italian authorities would first implement their undertaking regarding military relief. Immediately they did so our Custodian would take steps to release assets of approximately the same amount.

(b) Canadian claims would then be officially submitted to the Italian authorities for payment. As claims were paid further assets of approximately equal amounts would be released by our Custodian.

It is believed that this compromise would probably be acceptable to the Italian authorities.

11. If either compromise were adopted, and if the Italians did not pay Canadian claims reasonably quickly, we would always be in a position to liquidate the remaining assets and use the proceeds to settle claims.

Recommendations

12. I recommend that:

(a) Continued efforts be made to get a lump-sum settlement. No settlement should be made involving less than $150,000; £62,525; and 600 million lire (as indicated in column 2 of paragraph 7 above). If necessary, the Canadian Government would undertake to return to the Italian Government any surplus if the lump-sum turned out to be greater than the total of valid Canadian claims (paragraph 8 above).

(b) If such a lump-sum settlement turns out to be impossible then a settlement should be accepted along the lines of Compromise Number One or Compromise Number Two above.[64]

DESPATCH 301 Rome, May 15, 1950

Sir,

I have the honour to report that, following the preliminary examination of Canadian claims, the formal negotiations with the Italian representatives commenced on Monday, May 8. After introductory remarks by Signor [Casto] Caruso of the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, I broadly discussed the lump-sum settlement as instructed in the Cabinet memorandum but without at that time mentioning specific figures. Signor Caruso in turn proposed that Canada should release Italian assets and that Canadian claims under Article 78 of the Treaty be processed jointly by one representative from each country and that a similar procedure be followed for Canadian claims under Article 79.[65]

2. The following day Signor Caruso submitted a memorandum explaining their proposal (copy attached†) and, at the next general meeting on the morning of May 10, this memorandum was considerably amended. The Italians were at least proposing to accelerate greatly their normal treatment of claims, but were insistent on the release of assets within two months. We, of course, objected to this and prepared to propose formally the lump sum settlement in a revision of the memorandum on which we worked in considerable detail.

3. In the meantime examination of claims was continuing and, although there were many minor problems, the claims of the Aluminum companies presented the greatest difficulty and there has been regular contact with their representatives.

4. On the morning of May 11, I sent a letter to Signor Caruso attaching their text as revised by us, (see Annex†) with provision for the lump-sum settlement, but I indicated in the letter that as a concession we would offer to return any balance remaining after the claims found valid had been paid.

5. The third full meeting was held on the evening of May 11 prior to which Signor Caruso, in reply to my above-mentioned letter, had indicated by telephone that they were in fact prepared to consider a lump-sum settlement (without mentioning the return of any balance) and asked for our figures. After stating that our total unscreened claims were now in the neighbourhood of $2,425,000, we started at that meeting with the request for the equivalent of two million dollars, which the Italians felt was too high. After lengthy discussion they proposed that claims under Article 79 (which would be considerably reduced on the confirmation of evidence which had become available) should be dealt with separately and excluded from any lump-sum settlement. Coupled with this they offered to recommend to their Government $500,000 as settlement of Article 78 claims. We refused to consider this offer as adequate and advised Signor Caruso that, although Cabinet had directed a minimum of an equivalent of slightly more than $1,100,000 (lire 600 millions), we might be prepared to recommend to Cabinet the acceptance of the equivalent in lire of one million dollars on Article 78 claims. This concession might well require the claimants under Article 78 to receive less than the two-thirds of the value of their claims permitted under that Article. This is of particular importance to the Aluminum companies whose representatives have indicated their willingness to recommend to the companies the reduction of their claims on the lump-sum to $850,000 (lire 485 millions). These Aluminum companies would have to be prepared to take a further possible reduction of lire 32 millions on the basis of a one million dollar settlement.

6. A fourth and last plenary meeting took place on May 13, which lasted most of the day and at which the Italians stated that they could not, at this time, increase their offer of $500,000 above referred to, but would see if their Government would be prepared to increase it, while they hoped the Canadian government would consider accepting less than the equivalent in lire of $1,000,000 (Canadian). I repeated that I could not possibly recommend less than the latter figure, which, I made clear again, was below the minimum figure authorized by Cabinet.

7. At the suggestion and insistence of the Italians, the meeting was then devoted to the drafting of an agreement in which the lump sum for Article 78 claims was left in blank. This draft is attached hereto.†

8. It was agreed that a minute or "procès-verbal", covering the said draft, would make clear that we had refused their offer of (Canadian) $500,000, (or its equivalent, — it is not quite clear whether or not they withdrew at the final meeting their offer to pay that sum in Canadian dollars), and they had refused my offer to recommend acceptance of the equivalent in lire of $1,000,000. It would then be for the two governments to seek to breach the gap. Such "procès-verbal" is to record further that I am to recommend that the Canadian Government agree to supply to the Italian Government, upon request, a list of the Italian assets released and of those whose former owners cannot be found or have failed to apply for release. It was pointed out to them by Mr. Stein that the policy of the Canadian Government was opposed to the furnishing of such information to the governments of the former owners. It was also pointed out repeatedly that some assets presently listed as Italian in the Custodian's books might well turn out not to be Italian.

9. There now remains for the Italian and Canadian governments at top level, to endeavour to agree on a lump sum for the discharge of Canadian claims under Article 78 of the Peace Treaty. I feel that nothing more than what is briefly recorded herein could be done, and that no useful purpose would have been served by prolonging these negotiations.

10. Pending the conclusion of an agreement along the lines of the attached draft, or failure to reach any such agreement, it was understood that we should furnish the Italians photostats of the documents they require in support of our Article 78 claims and we would, in collaboration with them, endeavour to secure speedy settlement of the debts or claims not governed by that Article. The latter, it was agreed, were easy to settle in comparison with our Article 78 claims.

11. On the 12th instant, I called on the President of the Council [of Ministers, Alcide] DeGasperi, with Mr. Stein, to introduce the latter, and upon inquiry from Signor DeGasperi as to the nature of Stein's mission, I briefly summarized the negotiations we had been carrying on, explaining to the President of the Council what impasse we had reached. I pointed out the gap between their offer ($500,000) and our minimum asking ($1,000,000), but was careful not to request any intervention of the President of the Council, at the same time expressing the hope we would reach a settlement. This hope was shared by the President.

12. During an intermission at the final meeting of negotiations on May 13, Signor Caruso indicated that he had knowledge of our visit to the President of the Council and he shortly thereafter proceeded to offer to me (privately) to recommend raising their offer to $750,000 (splitting the difference between their offer and our asking). Upon resumption of the said final plenary meeting Signor Caruso reiterated his willingness to raise their offer as just stated.

13. This report was drafted jointly with Mr. Stein and his colleagues of the Canadian delegation, and in our opinion it is an accurate summary of these complex and most arduous negotiations. We wish to record, in conclusion, that we believe we were successful in preserving throughout cordial relations and a fairly pleasant atmosphere.

I have, etc.

PERSONAL London, May 19, 1950

My dear Mr. Pearson,

I should have liked in the last few days to speak to you about the question of Italian property still in the hands of the Canadian Custodian. However, the pressure of our work has been such that I felt we could not afford to divert our attention from questions strictly connected with the Council.

Now that the work is concluded I feel I can draw your attention on the matter.

The problem was also discussed during Mr. Stein's visit to Rome. It appears that the difference between the amount offered by Italy and that asked by Canada, by way of final settlement, is not considerable. Nevertheless, I wish to tell you that my experts assure me that we cannot depart, to any appreciable extent, from the figure offered, without involving questions of principle, prejudicial to the settlement of similar cases with other countries, and without causing an additional burden to the Italian Treasury. On the other hand, I understand that a solution in the sense of our proposal would not impose upon your Country a too heavy sacrifice.

Canada is one of the very few countries with which we have not, as yet, reached an agreement on the economic questions arising from the war, notwithstanding the good relations existing between us and the common aim of our foreign policy.

As it is our wish to settle this question as soon as possible I shall much appreciate if you will personally look into the matter when you get back to Ottawa with a view to reaching a satisfactory solution.

I shall also be grateful if you will let me know something in due course.

Personally, I give the greatest importance to a most cordial Italo-Canadian agreement in this field because I am leaving London persuaded that in certain cases an intimate contact between Ottawa and Rome may be useful to us both and to our greater allies. We two share this precious characteristic: neither too small nor too big. With my best wishes for you personally and for your country.

Cordially yours

Le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au ministre des Affaires étrangères de l'Italie

Secretary of State for External Affairs to Minister of Foreign Affairs of Italy

Ottawa, June 23, 1950

Dear Count Sforza,

You wrote to me in London on May 19 about the release of Italian property in the hands of the Canadian Custodian and the related matter of Canadian claims on Italy. I sent you a reply on May 24† in which I said I would look into the question when I got back to Canada. I have now done so and I gather that the amount offered by your officials in Rome, in full settlement of Canadian claims, was less than half the minimum amount to which our experts, who have tried to look into the matter fully and fairly, feel that Canadian claimants are reasonably entitled. This at least was the figure put forward during the course of the negotiations. I understand that one of your senior officials, just at the close of the negotiations, suggested that you might be able to increase this offer by fifty per cent. I assume you have this in mind in saying that "the difference between the amount offered by Italy and that asked by Canada, by way of final settlement, is not considerable".

2. Since our representatives returned from the discussions in Rome they have undertaken to review Canadian claims. These have to be revised from time to time in the light of new information becoming available and, more particularly, in the light of the changes in the valuations that have to be placed on property losses because of changing prices in Italy. When our latest revaluation has been completed, probably within five or six weeks, the matter will be examined again by the Canadian Government and a communication will be sent to your Government through our Ambassador in Rome.

Kindest personal regards,

Yours sincerely,

DESPATCH E-1161 Ottawa, November 29, 1950

SECRET

Reference: Our despatch No. 325 of April 14.†

SETTLEMENT OF CANADIAN WAR CLAIMS AGAINST ITALY

1. You will recall that at the meeting you attended here on September 12, it was decided that negotiations with the Italians to reach a lump-sum settlement of our War Claims would not be re-opened until your return to Rome and that considerable discussion took place concerning the method of dealing with the Aluminum Company Claim.

2. We are making it a particular point in this despatch not to go over the ground covered in the despatch under reference, but of course it includes a lot of the background information which is not mentioned here. For the sake of brevity we are confining ourselves to apprising you with developments which affect the settlement and which have occurred since the Spring negotiations took place.

3. Since your visit here we have had a meeting with officials of the Aluminum Company and it was ascertained that they would accept a minimum of 450 million lire as a settlement with the understanding that there would be no delay in payment. The Company's financial difficulties in Italy were explained to us and we were informed that at the present time the Company is forced to borrow from the banks at a very high rate of interest the funds needed to continue its Italian operations. The Aluminum officials were asked if they would have any objections to their claim being considered separately from the others, i.e. that a lump-sum Agreement would be reached with respect to the other claims and that theirs would be submitted to arbitration in the event that it was impossible to agree on a lump-sum settlement for all claims. We were told that they would not like such a procedure, that their claim was a valid as the others, perhaps more so, and that there was no reason why they should be "discriminated" against. We did point out, however, that since their claim was so much the largest, the best results for all concerned including themselves might result from treating their claim differently from the rest. They then went on to object most strongly to another proposal we had made, i.e. that we might release all Italian assets held by our Custodian before their claim had been completely settled.

4. We are of the opinion that we should be unnecessarily weakening our position if we released the Italian assets before our claims were settled and that we should, therefore, plan to retain at all times sufficient Italian assets to cover unsettled claims.

5. The Bata claim which, as you know, had been submitted on a faulty basis, has now been re-submitted in accordance with the provisions of the Treaty and the present value of the lire. It now amounts to 117 million lire on a two-thirds basis, formerly it was only 5,773,205 lire.

6. For the sake of clarity it has been decided that from now on reference should be made to the lire value of Article 78 claims and the settlement will be discussed in that currency with no mention of a Canadian dollar value. The claims submitted are based on loss and damages calculated in lire and the compensation will be awarded in non-convertible lire. The Canadian dollar value of the lire received or claimed is really only of theoretical interest, and it now fluctuates from day to day. If there is any substantial decrease in the internal value of the lire before our claims are settled, we would be entitled to revise our claims accordingly.

7. The total value of the Canadian claims, under Article 78 including the Bata and Aluminum Company claims, now amounts to approximately 776 million lire after deducting one third as provided for under the Treaty. For the sake of round figures we are going to ask for a settlement of 727 million lire which represents a reduction of about 6 per cent of the net value of the claims. Prior to the negotiations last Spring Cabinet had approved a settlement for a lump-sum. The maximum amount for which we were authorized to reach an agreement was 700 million lire and the minimum, 600 million lire. The exchange rate at that time was 563 lire to the Canadian dollar so the dollar value of the amounts just mentioned was 1,240,000 dollars and 1,100,000 dollars, respectively. You will recall that in Rome we considered that we should not begin by asking for less than 625 million lire. Subsequently consideration was given to recommending to Cabinet the acceptance of 563 million lire — or the then lire equivalent to one million dollars. (All these amounts exclude the one-third value under Article 78 and all of the Article 79 claims). The negotiations broke down because there was too great a difference between the amount we were willing to settle for and that which the Italians were prepared to offer. The highest figure they mentioned officially was the equivalent in lire of 500 thousand dollars, although an offer, never substantiated, was made of the equivalent in lire of 750 thousand dollars.

8. The reduction in the present proposal (from 776 million lire to 725 million lire) is less than the one considered during the Spring negotiations, but since then two factors have intervened which would justify our taking a less liberal attitude. The first is in line with Commonwealth Relations Office Telegram No. B-64 Saving of October 2nd.† It is in our interest to associate ourselves with the continuing insistence of France, the United Kingdom and the United States upon the implementation in full of Article 78 and to avoid accepting any settlement which involves a reduction of more than a nominal amount from the net total of our ascertained claims. This decision on the part of the aforementioned powers to follow a common policy is a secret arrangement which has not been brought to the attention of the Italian Government and is linked with the disposal by IARA of German assets in Italy. The second factor is the recent steady rise in prices in Italy after a year of relative stability. Such a trend if unchecked would affect the valuation of nearly all our Article 78 claims and would work to our disadvantage in accepting a lump-sum settlement.

9. We are attaching a complete list of Canadian Article 78 claims,† actual and potential, showing the lire amounts of the claims as known up to this time, based on two-thirds of the total loss or damage evaluation, and expenses. It will be seen that the total comes to 775,929,471 lire. As previously mentioned, we have decided to settle these claims in return for a lump-sum payment of 725 million lire, a reduction of about 6 percent.

10. Where the amount claimed is left in blank, it means that, to the best of our knowledge no amount has been claimed. This generally arises from the fact that no estimate of loss or damage has been prepared. The amounts involved in these claims are likely to be inconsiderable. You will realize that some of the claims against which a value is shown might be invalid or incapable of completely satisfactory substantiation. On the other hand some of these claims were submitted when the lire was of greater value than it is to-day.

11. There is one possible Canadian claim for which due to circumstances beyond our control we cannot obtain any evaluation. It is with respect to damage suffered to a large property near Florence belonging to the Executor of the will of the late Sir Alexander MacKenzie. This property has not yet been returned to the owner nor restored as required by paragraphs 1, 2, and 4 of Article 78. This claim figures as No. 39 on the attached list. The damage to the property is very considerable, but the National Trust Company have never submitted proper estimates as they have been unable to obtain restitution. In January, 1949, they submitted a "minimum" figure of 18 million lire. From evidence in our posession such as inventories and statements regarding the pre-war values for insurance purposes, the total damage may amount to 50 million lire at current prices. This possible claim should be held in reserve and specifically excluded from any general settlement.

12. There is still no agreement as to whether or not the Extraordinary Proportional Tax on Property (Part III of legislative decree No. 1131 of October 11, 1947) comes within the scope of paragraph 6 of Article 78 and it is not know whether or not our claimants and other Canadians owning property in Italy might have paid taxes under the other provisions of legislative decree No. 1131. We are thinking of refunds should taxes have been paid under Parts I and II of the decree. Accordingly any claims arising from paragraph 6 of Article 78 should be specifically excluded from any general settlement.

13. It must be made clear when negotiations are taking place that the figures under discussion only relate to claims under Article 78 and exclude debt claims under Article 79. The total of these amounts to about 300,000 dollars and they have been referred to as commercial debts. The amount of 300,000 dollars includes claims for sums due in United States dollars and sterling as well as Canadian dollars. Care must be taken not to lead the Italians to expect the Custodian to release Italian assets held to offset claims under Article 79 should there be a settlement of Article 78 claims and a consequent release of assets. Settlement of Article 79 claims would be dealt with along the lines of Article 2 of the Agreement drafted in Rome last May. You might tell the Italians that we are prepared to settle these claims on the basis of Article 2 if they would let us know what procedure is followed.

14. In regard to arrangements for the release of assets, the position of our Military Relief Settlement with Italy will have to be borne in mind.

15. You should therefore proceed to re-open negotiations with the Italian authorities on the basis described above. The figure of 725 million is a firm figure and we are of the opinion that we should not accept a lesser amount for the reasons that have been given. It is understood that if the Italians agree to such a lump-sum settlement, the Italian assets held in Canada will be released when the payment is made.

16. Considering that the Italians will be presented with a firm figure and your advice that there is no question of negotiating a compromise amount, it is clear that they only have the choice of completely accepting or rejecting our proposal. An early reply should be passed. We are not sanguine about what the answer will be, but we have promised to make one more attempt to reach a lump-sum settlement. There are now about twenty claims sufficiently documented for presentation to the Italian Government for decisions on their merits and for presentation to a Conciliation Commission, if necessary.

17. If the Italians turn down our proposal, we would like to know the reason and particularly if it is because of the large amount involved in the Aluminum Company claim. Should this be the case, you should enquire if they would be prepared to make a lump-sum settlement of 275 million lire for all the other Article 78 claims excluding the Aluminum Company's of 450 million lire.

18. You should then get in touch with us and we will let you know whether or not to proceed with a settlement. The situation would have to be considered in the light of what is to the general advantage of the claimants. Our decision would be based also on the amount for which the Italians are prepared to settle. We believe at the present time that we cannot entertain acceptance of an amount less than 275 million lire which amount would exclude the Aluminum Company claim, the Sir Alexander MacKenzie Property claim and tax claims under paragraph 6 of Article 78.

Note du conseiller en matière de politique au service international de Radio Canada

Memorandum by Policy Adviser to C.B.C.I.S.

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], February 24, 1950

NOTES ON MEETING HELD ON FEBRUARY 24 AND ATTENDED BY MESSRS. ANDERSON AND MACDERMOT, ROGERS AND MCCORDICK

I. Policy Guidance

1. The meeting agreed that it was desirable to give the I.S. a statement of the Department's conception of the aims and purpose of the I.S. The I.S. at present considers that its chief aims are

(a) to "put Canada on the map",

(b) to build up an audience informed on and well-disposed towards Canada (note — it would be useful to have a large ready-made audience should the I.S. some day have to be turned into an instrument of psychological warfare), and

(c) to help promote Canadian trade in those regions where trade, goodwill and information are to some extent interlocked.

It is desirable that the Department's statement make clear what other aims should be added to the above. It would seem that the time has now come when consideration should be given to some change in emphasis without sacrificing the I.S.'s deserved and respected reputation for objectivity. News must remain accurate and objective (although the selection of items does provide the means of "slanting" to some extent). However, commentaries and news analyses may be used to a far greater extent than at present as a weapon in the cold war.

2. At present policy is applied negatively in Montreal, i.e., scripts, etc., are examined for inaccuracies and are, in a manner of speaking, censored. In this process it is often difficult to distinguish policy from the personal opinions of the I.S. Policy Section. The positive side of policy must now be built up by providing the I.S. with regular guidance from the Department within the framework of the general aims of the I.S. to be established.

II. Background Material

1. It is desirable that the Policy Section of the I.S. and, when necessary, the heads of the Area Sections be provided with some of the background material on which the Department has based its policy recommendations.

2. Mr. McCordick will be able to see all necessary material when he comes to Ottawa, but it will have to be decided in the light of security and the needs of the I.S. what despatches, Foreign Office prints, Departmental memos and documents provided by the Information Research Department of the Foreign Office should go to Montreal.

3. Two security problems arise:

(a) Physical. In Montreal Mr. McCordick will be provided with good locks for his office doors to which only he and Mr. Dilworth will have keys. Cleaning women may enter only when Mr. McCordick is there. (However, the working conditions in the I.S. are such that Mr. McCordick will not be able to lock his door every time he leaves his office.) The I.S. will also supply a good filing cabinet which it is said cannot be opened from behind with a paper knife.

(b) It is not certain to what extent all members of the I.S. can be trusted with confidential material. The meeting agreed, as will be mentioned below, that Mr. McCordick would have to decide in each case what material to show to members of the I.S. other than Mr. Dilworth.

III. Machinery

1. Ottawa. The meeting agreed that Mr. McCordick should come at frequent though not necessarily regular intervals to Ottawa and that he should be briefed on policy by

(a) reading relevant despatches and memoranda,

(b) talking to Heads of Divisions and other officers of the Department and attending such special meetings as it may be necessary to convene,

(c) receiving from the Department memoranda prepared in various Divisions for the express purpose of providing policy guidance to the I.S.

It should be decided how Mr. Benson can best be fitted into the procedure.

2. Montreal. Mr. McCordick will hold policy briefing meetings, usually directly on return from a visit to Ottawa but also at other times if necessary. He will make some general remarks on what he has learnt in Ottawa and on the broader aspects of policy and will then make additional remarks of special interest to the various areas. This will be followed by questions and discussion to clarify doubtful points. Mr. McCordick will have to use his discretion to determine what background material should be provided at this policy meeting, what should be shown separately to the Policy Section of the I.S. and what should be given after the meeting to the heads of the language sections.

IV. General

The application of positive policy guidance should have the following results:

(1) Officers of the Department should become accustomed to thinking in terms of the I.S. as an instrument of Canadian foreign policy and to bearing its needs in mind when reading despatches, writing memoranda and so on. It may at first be burdensome to require Divisions to prepare policy memoranda, but when the Divisions become accustomed to thinking in terms of the I.S.'s aims and needs this should become a less irksome routine.

(2) The negative or censorship side of the Policy Section's functions in Montreal will probably always be necessary but as positive guidance becomes increasingly effective, script writers will be able to produce scripts requiring less and less editing. At the same time the morale of the I.S. should benefit by receiving guidance and evidence of interest from Ottawa to replace the present feeling of isolation and neglect.

It will be seen from the above that policy guidance should assume three forms:

(1) Statement of the Department's view of the general aims and purpose of the I.S.

(2) Regular provision of guidance plus background material. This guidance may be applicable to all languages of the I.S. but more frequently it will probably vary in nature and emphasis for the different programmes.

(3) Specific requests by the I.S. for guidance. Occasions frequently arise when the I.S. needs a directive on short notice dealing with a news item or event which has suddenly come to the fore. It is hoped that when asked by telephone or teletype, the Department will in most cases be able to provide guidance on short notice.

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, March 22, 1950

VISIT TO CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION
INTERNATIONAL SERVICE[1]

On Mr. Dilworth's[2] invitation I visited Montreal on Friday, March 17, to meet the staff of the C.B.C.I.S. and to talk over some of the problems which have come up in connection with the association of the Department with C.B.C.I.S. In addition to conversations with Mr. Dilworth I talked with most of the heads of sections dealing with the various geographical areas to which C.B.C.I.S. broadcasts and I had an opportunity to meet a number of members of the C.B.C.I.S. staff socially at Mr. Dilworth's apartment that evening. The following were the more important points which came up in discussion:

---

[1] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Mr. Heeney[,] E. R[eid]

[2] Ira Dilworth, superviseur général, R.C.I.
Ira Dilworth, General Supervisor, C.B.C.I.S.

Policy Guidance

Mr. Dilworth spoke quite emphatically about the desire of C.B.C.I.S. to receive a written statement of general guidance on policy from the Department. He said that when he had first come to C.B.C.I.S. he had been inclined to feel that there should not be too much interference from the Department. He still believed that so far as the techniques of broadcasting were concerned, these were matters which C.B.C.I.S. would handle for itself but in the present international situation it was essential that they should have a framework of policy to apply. I said that as he was aware a paper of this kind was now being considered in the Department. Mr. McCordick also mentioned this subject and said that as he was advising on policy matters he felt the need of such direction from the Department if he was to do a useful job at C.B.C.I.S.

The sort of situation which arises at present is illustrated by a conversation I had with Mr. [E.A.O.] Koch, the Head of the German Section. He said that in writing his news scripts for Germany he had to touch on such questions as the revival of German nationalism, German unity and the Saar and he would welcome any indication of our views on these questions. He remarked that he gathered that the Canadian attitude was in line with that of French policy over most German problems. He seemed to have derived this view from his impression of General Pope's personal reactions. I told him that it would be a mistake to conclude that the Canadian Government's views on Germany were closer to those of the French Government than they were to those of the United States and the United Kingdom. I was struck by this instance of guesswork on the part of a member of the staff of C.B.C.I.S. Mr. Koch also asked whether it would not be possible for excerpts from the reports of our Mission in Bonn to be forwarded to C.B.C.I.S. as these would give him useful background in his broadcasts.

While C.B.C.I.S. are anxious to receive political guidance I formed the personal impression that the staff were for the most part inclined to favour their present "objective" treatment of news and might prefer it to a more actively "cold war" approach.

Liaison and Information

In addition to the general statement of our policy objectives C.B.C.I.S. would like to receive continuous guidance on particular questions as they arise and also fuller information on questions in the field of foreign affairs which affect their work. These requirements if we agree that they are justified raise the problem of satisfactory liaison. Mr. Dilworth spoke to me about the difficulty at the present time of maintaining regular contact with any one official in the Department who had continuous responsibility for relations with C.B.C.I.S. He said that their Liaison Officer in Ottawa, Mr. [Thomas F.] Benson, found himself dealing with a number of officers in different divisions of the Department no one of whom had the definite responsibility for providing consecutive guidance and information to C.B.C.I.S.

Mr. Dilworth spoke with appreciation of Mr. McCordick's appointment on loan to C.B.C.I.S.

Listener Response

I enquired of the heads of the section what evidence they had of listener response in the areas to which they broadcast. The most satisfactory response appears to come from the Netherlands and Scandinavia. The response is less good from France but the Head of the French Section did not appear dissatisfied. He thought the French were little inclined to comment on radio programs and that there was genuine interest in the broadcasts in the provinces rather than in Paris. The Czech Section reported that for obvious reasons there had been a drastic reduction in letters of comment on the broadcasts since the Communist coup d'état and that with the new restrictions imposed on outgoing correspondence from Czechoslovakia this falling off would increase still further. The Acting Head of the Section added, however, that he was still getting a certain number of letters of comment sometimes posted from Germany and apparently smuggled out from Czechoslovakia. The Head of the German Section said that in addition to correspondence from Western Germany he received quite a number of letters from the Eastern Zone although these were decreasing.

Mr. McCordick tells me that he has now had an opportunity to read a good many of the C.B.C.I.S. scripts. It is his general impression that they contain little or nothing which is objectionable from the point of view of this Department or which reveals a divergence from Government policy. He added that they seemed very "objective" in character and they struck him as rather colourless.

General

I was welcomed very cordially by the staff of C.B.C.I.S. and in particular by Mr. Dilworth himself. They assured me that they would welcome more frequent visits from officers of the Department whose work brings them in contact with that of C.B.C.I.S. Such increased personal contacts do seem desirable. C.B.C.I.S. seems somewhat isolated in Montreal. It is hard for them to be aware of the tendencies of thinking in Government and official circles as they have not the occasion for the daily social and working contacts which they would have in Ottawa. This isolation is perhaps accentuated by the very cosmopolitan character of the staff.

The main possibilities for more satisfactory consultative arrangements between the Department and C.B.C.I.S. seem to be:

(a) the provision as at present contemplated of a written framework of policy guidance for C.B.C.I.S.;

(b) arrangements for giving them some measure of guidance on current policy questions as they arise;

(c) the provision of fuller background information on Canada's external relations so far as this is compatible with security considerations; and,

(d) more satisfactory liaison arrangements to provide for fuller continuity in our relations with C.B.C.I.S.

Le sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures au directeur général de la Société Radio-Canada

Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to General Manager, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, May 27, 1950

Dear Dr. [Augustin] Frigon:

I know that for some time the International Service has been anxious to receive from the Department more information on Canadian foreign policy in general and our policy in relation to individual countries. We have already taken steps to increase the flow of such information. For the sake of convenience, the material is sent to Mr. McCordick of this Department whose services have been loaned to the International Service; but it is assumed of course that he will keep you fully informed and up to date. Pending the completion of arrangements for the physical security of documents in Montreal, certain papers are set aside for Mr. McCordick to see when he comes to Ottawa. If you wish to have any particular information yourself at any time, we shall be glad to arrange it. When Mr. McCordick returns to the Department, arrangements will be made for the flow of information to continue.

I am aware also that you have frequently expressed a desire to receive an expression of the Department's views on the basic objectives of the International Service; more specific guidance on the policies which the Department thinks should be followed by the International Service in its broadcasts to certain countries or areas; and advice that may be sought from day to day on the treatment of specific situations.

It is, I agree, quite appropriate that you should receive information and guidance from the Department. As you will recall, the Order-in-Council setting up the International Service states specifically that "the work of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in this field should be carried on in consultation with the Department of External Affairs." This is formal recognition that short-wave broadcasting by the CBC is to be conducted in close and current co-operation with the officers responsible for the general conduct of Canadian external policies.

So far as current policy objectives are concerned, the view of the Department — put very briefly — is that CBCIS should:

I. project Canada by

(i) explaining Canadian policies and principles and their background, and

(ii) presenting a picture of Canadian life, people, industry etc.;

II. promote Western democratic unity, understanding and friendship, and participate in any movement to these ends which may be organized, for example, within the framework of the Atlantic Pact;

III. participate actively on behalf of Canada in the cold war, and

IV. promote Canadian trade.

The simplest and most obvious grouping of target areas for IS purposes is in two categories: (1) Soviet and satellite; and (2) the free countries of the world. Broadcasts to the Soviet and satellite area would have I and III as their chief objectives, whereas the chief aims of other broadcasts would be covered by I, II, and IV.

In as much as there exists in the world today an inescapable conflict between Soviet imperialism on the one hand, and democracy on the other, active participation in the cold war covers a great deal of ground. In the cold war, as in a shooting war, each side tries to strengthen the morale of its own supporters, win over the neutrals, weaken the enemy. In prosecuting the cold war, therefore, the CBCIS, in the opinion of the Department, should try to encourage the people on our side, win over the waverers in countries where the battle is more closely joined, bring over to our side the neutrals, and get the better of our opponents. It can help to do this in its broadcasts to the Soviet and satellite area by applying objective I above, and by including in objective III the following tasks:

(a) to give an adequate account of what is going on in the world through a news service which is comprehensive, true, and objective;

(b) to strive constantly to identify communism as an instrument of Soviet imperialism;

(c) to appeal to the national self-respect of subject people, without attempting to incite them to revolt;

(d) to unmask the hypocrisy of communist "democracy" in elections, trade unions, labour camps, religion, etc., and the hypocrisy of Soviet "peace propaganda" and its inconsistency in view of Soviet aggressive foreign policy, rearmament and concentration on heavy industry to the detriment of the Soviet standard of living;

(e) to correct misrepresentations, e.g. in the case of the Polish art treasures, where Canadian actions are being grossly distorted by Communist propaganda;

(f) continually to remind listeners living under Communists tyranny that, although we have our social problems of minorities, slums and occasional injustice, we cope with them, as do other democratic nations, by bringing about social change without violence; and that the lives of our common citizens are not dominated by police, arbitrary law decreed by a "Party elite", official kidnapping, "trials" without benefit of justice, and ubiquitous "security" organs who are a law unto themselves.

Although in the non-Soviet satellite area the chief objectives are, as already stated, covered by (I), (II) and (IV) above, there is also some need in certain countries for the application of some of the points given in the preceding paragraph. For example, broadcasts to countries with large communist parties like France and Italy should contain occasional injections of (b), (d) and (f). The implications of (c) should not be neglected, but adapted to show proud peoples what happens when native communists seize the reins of power and then immediately transfer them to the Kremlin's iron grasp. (In this connection much use can be made of the Tito-Cominform dispute, and even of Yugoslav material designed to prove Stalinism a Marxist-Leninist heresy.) Finally, (e) would be of general application.

In this letter I do not propose to discuss Canada's foreign policy in relation to specific countries or areas. This will be done in supplementary notes which are being prepared and which will be forwarded to you from time to time. With regard to economic foreign policy, it is probably unnecessary to provide you with any guidance except in detail as it may apply to specific countries, for the main lines have been clearly and publicly expressed on many occasions. In so far as the detailed promotion of trade is concerned, it is assumed that the International Service has working arrangements with the Department of Trade and Commerce. Concerning immigration policy, I imagine that you have already sought guidance from the Department of Citizenship and Immigration.

Yours sincerely,
A.D.P. HEENEY

Monsieur le Ministre,[3]

Au cours de la réunion qu'ils ont tenue à Paris le 10 novembre 1949, les Ministres des Affaires Étrangères des États-Unis, de France et du Royaume-Uni avaient examiné l'attitude qu'il conviendrait d'adopter vis-à-vis de la « République Allemande Démocratique » instaurée en Allemagne Orientale par le Gouvernement soviétique, et ils avaient décidé de confier à la Commission permanente du Traité de Bruxelles le soin de préparer des recommandations à ce sujet. Texte de Recommandations préparées par la Commission permanente du Traité de Bruxelles au sujet de l'attitude à adopter vis-à-vis de la « République Allemande Démocratique »
instaurée par le Gouvernement soviétique

Les cinq Gouvernements et le Gouvernement des États-Unis sont opposés dans les circonstances actuelles à la reconnaissance de jure ou de facto de la République Allemande Démocratique. Ils souhaitent que tous les Gouvernements qui acceptent ce principe adoptent à l'égard de la « République Allemande Démocratique » une attitude analogue à la leur dans les problèmes suivants qui tous risquent de poser directement ou indirectement la question de la reconnaissance:

1. Relations commerciales entre les Gouvernements intéressés et l'Allemagne de l'Est.

Les opérations commerciales devraient être traitées uniquement par l'intermédiaire d'organisations privées telles que les Chambres de Commerce. Le fait que de telles organisations privées, relevant de nous, puissent traiter avec des organisations officielles comme contre-parties n'implique pas nécessairement la reconnaissance. Dans la mesure où il est nécessaire de discuter les questions relatives à des accords commerciaux avec l'Allemagne de l'Est, les cinq Gouvernements ainsi que le Gouvernement des États-Unis désirent maintenir la situation existant avant la création de la République Allemande Démocratique, c'est-à-dire traiter ces questions par l'intermédiaire de l'autorité soviétique.

S'il s'avérait impossible, dans certains cas particuliers et exceptionnels, d'éviter certains rapports avec l'administration de l'Allemagne de l'Est ceci devrait se faire à un niveau aussi peu élevé et aussi temporaire que possible. Il devrait être exprimé clairement que cette administration de l'Allemagne de l'Est est considérée comme agissant sous la responsabilité gouvernementale des autorités soviétiques d'occupation.

2. Protection des biens des ressortissants.

Les cinq Gouvernements et le Gouvernement des États-Unis estiment que cette protection incombe au Gouvernement soviétique, toujours responsable des actes de la République Allemande Démocratique.

3. Participation du Gouvernement allemand de l'Est dans les organisations internationales.

Les cinq Gouvernements et le Gouvernement des États-Unis sont opposés à une telle participation.

Les cinq Gouvernements et le Gouvernement des États-Unis expriment l'espoir que les Gouvernements intéressés seront prêts à échanger entre eux toutes les informations utiles concernant les difficultés qu'ils pourraient rencontrer dans leurs rapports avec l'Allemagne de l'Est et à procéder à des consultations mutuelles, en vue d'adopter une attitude commune, si ceci s'avérait nécessaire.

Extract from Memorandum from Head, European Division, to Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], January 19, 1950

On January 18th Mr. Basdevant, Counsellor of the French Embassy, called on me to discuss the question of relations with the East German régime. Mr. Andrew was also present. This meeting was prompted by a note from the French Ambassador which enclosed a resolution of the Consultative Committee of the Brussels Powers. The resolution laid down a procedure for dealing with Eastern Germany, principally in commercial matters, and the French Government wanted to know if the Canadian Government would follow the same procedure in its dealings with the East German régime. Mr. Basdevant had called as you may remember in response to your suggestion in a note† to the French Embassy that he talk this matter over with us.

2. I told Mr. Basdevant that we had been giving serious thought to this question for some time. We were in general agreement with the principles given in the Brussels resolution but that our commercial relations in Eastern Germany were quite limited and that our principle problems were in matters of an administrative, consular or quasi-diplomatic nature. I cited as an example our need to obtain an interzonal pass from the Soviet authorities to enable members of our mission in Berlin to travel to the western zones. We were concerned that the administration of border control might be handed over to the German "Government". We found that by confining their formula to commercial relations, the Brussels Powers' resolution did not specifically cover the problems with which we were most likely to be faced. The principle, however, could be applied to cover our problem. We had put forward views similar to those contained in the Brussels resolution in London, Washington and Paris and had found no substantial disagreement in those quarters.

3. Mr. Basdevant asked if the U.K. or U.S. had also asked us to subscribe to the Brussels formula. I said the U.K. had informed us of the resolution but had not asked us to comment on it.

4. I told Mr. Basdevant that we recognized the importance of following a common line in this question and that we would consider sending the French Ambassador a note subscribing to the Brussels formula and pointing out that we felt its principles could easily be applied to a wider range of subjects than the problem of commercial relations to which the resolution confined itself. Mr. Basdevant thought this would be very satisfactory.

LETTRE N° 13 Ottawa, le 1er février 1950

Monsieur l'Ambassadeur,

Me référant de nouveau à votre note n° 2 du 6 janvier 1950 concernant l'attitude à adopter vis-à-vis du régime dit « Gouvernement provisoire de la République Allemande Démocratique », j'ai l'honneur de faire savoir à Votre Excellence que le Gouvernement canadien est entièrement d'accord avec les vues de la Commission permanente du Traité de Bruxelles, exposées dans les Recommandations dont le texte était joint à votre note.

Pour l'instant, le Gouvernement canadien prévoit que c'est sur le plan administratif, consulaire ou quasi diplomatique que les rapports avec les autorités de l'Allemagne orientale sont le plus susceptibles de constituer un problème. Nous nous proposons par conséquent d'appliquer le principe de la responsabilité première du Gouvernement soviétique, incorporé dans votre note du 6 janvier, et le cas échéant de nous adresser d'abord, pour toute affaire de ce genre, aux autorités soviétiques elles-mêmes. Si l'on nous renvoie au « Gouvernement de la République Allemande Démocratique », nous ferons toute démarche de ce côté en nous en tenant au principe établi dans le texte des recommandations quant à la façon de traiter les opérations commerciales.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS; REPORT ON REQUESTS FOR ECONOMIC ASSISTANCE

24. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that Canada was faced with an increasing number of requests to provide economic and relief assistance for other countries. To date, there had been participation in the relief for Palestine refugees,[4] the United Nations expanded programme for technical assistance,[5] the Colombo plan for cooperative technical assistance to South and South-East Asia,[6] the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund,[7] and the International Refugee Organization.[8] In each of these cases, funds had been voted by Parliament for the specific purpose indicated. However, when an emergency developed which it was considered Canada should assist in meeting, there were no funds readily available. It might be possible to vote a lump sum for international relief and economic assistance and leave some leeway concerning its specific apportionment. Probably each demand on the fund should be referred to Cabinet. It was suggested that an interdepartmental committee, composed of representatives of Finance, External Affairs, and other appropriate departments, might study the feasibility of this proposal and report to Cabinet.

At the present time there was a specific inquiry from the United States concerning the Canadian attitude towards provision of relief for Yugoslavia. The crisis there was partly due to the economic blockade by Cominform states and partly to the partial crop failure this year. Near starvation conditions threatened in many areas this winter. Yugoslavia had stated that it needed $121 million in aid, and U.S. authorities appeared to consider this a reasonable estimate. The U.S. Embassy had left with External Affairs on November 6th an Aide Mémoire† which had been delivered in almost identical terms to other N.A.T.O. members. This asked two questions on which the United States wished a reply by that evening:

(a) whether in the view of the Canadian Government "the immediate increased ability of Yugoslavia to defend itself would contribute to the preservation of peace and the security of the North Atlantic area, keeping in mind the direct importance to the defence of the North Atlantic area of the strategic location of Yugoslavia"; and,

(b) whether the Government of Canada felt able to make a contribution of its own to meet this problem affecting the interests of all the North Atlantic Treaty nations.

(External Affairs memorandum for Minister, Nov. 7, 1950; Minister's memorandum to Cabinet, Nov. 8, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 253-50).[9]

25. Mr. Pearson stressed the importance of a strong Yugoslavia to the maintenance of peace, as it was the first communist country to oppose the Kremlin. Furthermore, Yugoslavia had the largest and most powerful army in Europe, outside the Iron Curtain. However, while it was essential to keep Yugoslavia from breaking up, this should be considered as another incident in the cold war and one that might properly be dealt with by the United Kingdom and the United States.

26. The Prime Minister suggested that the Canadian public was not likely to regard the situation as one which created a moral obligation on this country to assist.

27. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that it be indicated to the U.S. Ambassador that, while the Canadian Government realized the importance of assisting Yugoslavia and considered that the immediate increased ability of that country to defend itself would contribute to the preservation of peace and the security of the North Atlantic area, nevertheless, in view of present commitments it would not be possible for Canada to participate at this time in the provision of relief to Yugoslavia.

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], December 14, 1950

The Yugoslav Minister called on me by appointment on December 13 and raised for the first time officially the question of a possible Canadian contribution of foodstuffs to Yugoslavia. Mr. [Rade] Pribičević said that about ten days ago he had discussed this matter with the Right Honourable C.D. Howe, who had informed him that the question was being discussed by the Canadian Government. Mr. Howe was probably referring to the discussions which were held in Cabinet on November [9] Aucun document n'a été trouvé./Neither document was located.

8 in which it was decided that "while the Canadian Government realized the importance of assisting Yugoslavia and considered that the immediate increased ability of that country to defend itself would contribute to the preservation of peace and the security of the North Atlantic area, nevertheless, in view of present commitments it would not be possible for Canada to participate at this time in the provision of relief in Yugoslavia".

Mr. Pribičevič told me that the economic situation in Yugoslavia had suffered greatly because of the drought and that as far as foodstuffs alone were concerned his country, which in normal years exported a considerable amount of food, now had to import some. He added that the economic blockade by Cominform states had placed a serious strain on the whole Yugoslav economy.

He referred to the assistance already promised by the United States and the United Kingdom and said that such contributions would be of great assistance in alleviating present difficulties; he pointed out, however, that that was not enough to meet the crisis and that any assistance that the Canadian Government could give would be most welcome.

He also emphasized the political difficulties which were created for the Tito régime because of the effects of the droughts. He said that the Yugoslavs were being daily subjected to Cominform propaganda, the leit-motiv of which was that all their present ills were due to the régime of Marshal Tito and that these ills would be cured if they repented and joined the Cominform again. Such arguments were being reinforced by the permanent presence at the Yugoslav frontiers of six Soviet divisions, not to mention the armies of the bordering satellite states.

I asked the Yugoslav Minister how much assistance his Government would expect from Canada. He answered that he had no set of figures but that they would welcome any amount of foodstuffs that could be spared. When questioned as to whether the Yugoslav Government had ever thought of submitting a request for assistance through FAO or ECA, Mr. Pribičevič replied that he was not aware that any such request had ever been made but that he would look into the matter. According to his information, the only two sources of assistance were the United States and the United Kingdom.

I told Mr. Pribičevič that the Canadian Government was already heavily committed in such schemes as the Relief and Rehabilitation for Korea, the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees, etc., but that the most sympathetic consideration would, however, be given to Yugoslavia's plight at the present time. I assured him that I would be taking the matter up with you and that, without wishing to raise false hopes, you would certainly give it your most earnest consideration.

I realize that this matter has already been discussed in Cabinet and that a negative answer was given following the United States enquiry concerning the Canadian attitude towards provision of relief for Yugoslavia. I should like to emphasize the point, however, that under present conditions in Europe and under those which we may expect will develop within the next twelve months or so, there is a very strong case to be made militarily as well as politically in favour of providing Yugoslavia with some assistance. Even a token gesture, such as the sending of one shipment of grain, would probably have considerable political value. It seems to me that there is as much, if not more, value in keeping the morale of the Yugoslav army in fighting form as there is in the spending of the equivalent amount of money on our own defence programme. As a matter of fact, the Canadian dollar would probably stretch much farther in that direction.[10]

ECONOMIC AID TO YUGOSLAVIA

27. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of November 8th, 1950, said that the Yugoslav Minister had again raised the question of economic aid from Canada. The United States was furnishing foodstuffs and the United Kingdom was extending credit. Dr. Pribičević had stated, however, that failure to obtain sufficient help to overcome the effects of the drought and the Cominform blockade was a matter of considerable concern to his government as the Cominform countries, which had divisions on the Yugoslav frontiers, were exploiting the economic difficulties and the absence of adequate foreign aid. The Tito régime was of course Communist but, if the position of Yugoslavia deteriorated further and the country, which had a number of army divisions, were taken over, it would be a serious matter. Part of the population was starving, and any assistance through the Food and Agriculture Organization might be too late.

The Minister had been informed that the Canadian position would be reviewed and it seemed, therefore, desirable to have the availability of surplus Canadian foodstuffs studied.

28. The Prime Minister felt that direct aid presented difficulties as important sections of Canada considered the Tito régime hostile to Christian civilization. If the government were to furnish direct aid to a Communist country, there would be criticism as to not being sincere in the contention that, in participating in the North Atlantic Treaty Organization, Canada was supporting efforts designed to protect the kind of civilization Canadians wanted. If, however, Yugoslavia made a request to the Food and Agriculture Organization it might be easier to supply foodstuffs through that channel.

29. The Minister of Agriculture said that there would be little beyond potatoes and fish products available for provision to Yugoslavia.

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa, n.d.]

1. A number of applications for Canadian travel documents have been received by the Legation in Belgrade from Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals and their dependents who returned to Yugoslavia on the Radnik and now wish to come back to Canada. Many of these persons travelled to Yugoslavia on Yugoslav passports. In those cases in which Canadian passports were used they were impounded by the Yugoslav authorities on arrival.

2. Before any of these dual nationals, whether natural born or naturalized Canadians, can leave Yugoslavia, they are required to obtain exit permits from Yugoslav authorities. To assist them to do so a procedure was established in December 1948, whereby the Mission in Belgrade might grant Emergency Certificates of validity restricted to three months in order to provide eligible applicants with Canadian documents which would show the Yugoslav authorities that they were admissible to Canada. Nevertheless so far very few persons have been successful in obtaining permission to return.

3. However, there are now a few cases in which the Minister at Belgrade is seeking authority to issue Emergency Certificates. In these cases it is the practice to make security enquiries before approval is given. In one case . . . [11] it is reported that the applicants, both Canadian citizens by naturalization, were known to be members of a Communist controlled organization before leaving Canada.

Names deleted in accordance with the provisions of the Privacy Act.

4. The question arises whether anything should be done to facilitate the return to Canada of persons with such records.[12]

5. The following considerations weigh against granting Emergency Certificates:

(i) These persons were known to be members of a Communist organization here. They may now wish to return to Canada only because they are more attached to the Russian than to the Yugoslav school of Communism.

(ii) They ignored the warning contained in the Government's Press release of April 30, 1948,† that Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals who went to Yugoslavia might be unable to obtain permission to leave that country.

(iii) We do not undertake to afford diplomatic and consular protection to dual nationals while they are in the country of their other nationality and could decline to grant them Emergency Certificates if it were considered desirable.

6. The following considerations tell in favour of granting Emergency Certificates:

(i) The applicants are Canadian citizens by naturalization admissible to Canada as of right even without travel documents. Their citizenship is not subject to revocation on the security grounds adduced.

(ii) Denial of travel documents on security grounds would place these persons in a less favoured position than other Canadian citizens, including the renegades who fought against Canada in the recent war.

(iii) To deny Emergency Certificates would probably destroy any chance there might be of securing exit permits; in other cases, denial of a Certificate to the head of a family group on security grounds applicable to him alone might prevent the whole family group from returning to this country.

(iv) Many persons who contemplated returning to Yugoslavia were assured by Yugoslav officials here that they would be allowed to leave Yugoslavia whenever they wished.

(v) There is evidence that many of those who were sympathetic to Communism when they left Canada have radically changed their views as a result of their experiences in Yugoslavia.

7. In order that these cases may be dealt with I should be grateful for instructions as follows:

Should Emergency Certificates be granted to [those in such circumstances]?[13]

CANADIAN-YUGOSLAV DUAL NATIONALS; RETURN TO CANADA

42. The Secretary of State for External Affairs reported that a number of Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals who had gone to Yugoslavia a year or two ago were now wanting to return to Canada. They had been informed at the time of their departure that they would be incurring the risk of losing their Canadian citizenship, and it had been made clear that the Canadian government could not provide any undertaking with regard to their position in Yugoslavia or their return to Canada. It was proposed that nothing should be done to assist such persons to return except in cases where return of an individual would be useful from the national point of view.

43. The Cabinet, after discussion approved the recommendation of the Secretary of State for External Affairs concerning the disposition of applications by Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals for assistance to return to Canada.

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

SECRET [Ottawa], July 11, 1950

A difficult administrative situation arises from the Cabinet Directive of May 4 which provides that in future nothing should be done to assist Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals to return to this country except in cases where the return of an individual would be useful from a national point of view.

2. It is, as you know, a very well-established practice that a citizen is permitted to leave and return to his own country. The Cabinet Directive does not say that those Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals will not be permitted to re-enter Canada if they can present themselves at Canadian ports; it does, however, in fact operate to that effect.

3. The people with whom we are here concerned are so far few in number. The present situation arises from the fact that when they went to Yugoslavia they either travelled on Yugoslav passports or their Canadian passports were taken from them on arrival. Prima facie it would seem that if the Yugoslav Government were interested in their return to Canada for the purposes of spreading anti-Stalinist Communist doctrine it would not create difficulty for them by refusing to return Canadian passports to those who had surrendered them.

4. The administrative difficulties in establishing with any degree of certainty that the return of any of these individuals would be actively in the public interest are very great. Had the Cabinet Directive been posed in negative terms, viz. that facilities (i.e. travel documents) should be refused to those whose return would not be in the national interest, it would be easier to administer.

5. In any event it is almost certain that there will arise complaints of discrimination against individuals and that the Government will inevitably be put in the position of having to refuse facilities to Canadian citizens to return to Canada without being able to disclose any reason for the action taken.

6. It is extremely questionable whether it is possible to maintain a position in which a naturalization certificate remains unrevoked although its holder is to all intents and purposes denied admission to this country. You will recall the effort which was made to maintain such a position with regard to German renegades and which ultimately broke down, the persons concerned being re-admitted to this country. The difficulty is even more pronounced with respect to those Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals who are natural-born Canadian citizens.

7. Another facet of this problem concerns the wisdom of making some differentiation between Titoists and Stalinists. On the whole the departmental consensus is that there would be some advantage from the Canadian standpoint in taking a more favourable view towards Titoists than we would towards Stalinists.

8. In these circumstances you may wish to discuss this matter again with your Cabinet colleagues or, alternatively, to instruct that the Cabinet Directive be so administered that passports and emergency certificates shall not be issued to Canadian dual nationals in Yugoslavia whose return to Canada would not be in the public interest. The procedure which would be adopted would be as follows:[16]

(a) No facilities would be given to those who are known to be Communists of the Stalinist school.[17]

(b) Facilities would be given to Communists of the Titoist school.[18]

(c) Facilities would be given to anti-Communists or to those former Communists who are known to have recanted their faith.[19]

[16] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
My feeling on this problem is influenced by the fact that these Jugo Slavs, when they left Canada, claimed they were going to a Communist paradise & never wished to return to Canada etc. Well, why should we help them — especially if they are still Communists? [L.B. Pearson].

LETTER NO. 442 Belgrade, September 21, 1950

TREATMENT OF CANADIAN-YUGOSLAV DUAL NATIONALS

I have considered carefully the above letter, together with the Memorandum to the Minister, dated July 11, which was attached to it. Before considering the proposal that we should attempt here to categorize dual nationals in the manner suggested in Paragraph 8 of the Memorandum to the Minister, I should like to put forward one or two observations which I feel apply to all these dual nationals, whatever their security record. I have put forward briefly in my telegram No. 166 of September 19,[21] some of the considerations which appear to apply:

I. Naturalized Canadians

2. Where the Yugoslav Government is prepared to grant Yugoslav passports to dual nationals, together with valid exit permits, we have been placed in the position of refusing to grant travel facilities to persons who have had security records, but who are still Canadian citizens. Where they are still in possession of valid Canadian passports, which have been in effect impounded by the Legation, our action amounts, I presume, to impounding a valid Canadian passport under the powers given by the Royal prerogative. It will be appreciated that where a Yugoslav document and exit permit have been issued and a valid passport still exists, the individual could leave Yugoslavia on the Yugoslav document and enter Canada on the valid Canadian passport. Where we deny Canadian travel documents in cases of this kind the individual has the alternative of entering the Free Territory of Trieste, either by escaping clandestinely from Yugoslavia or by using a valid Yugoslav exit permit. In the event that he arrives in Trieste I find it difficult to see how in law a Canadian travel document can be denied. If this were done I assume that the Allied authorities in Trieste would be entitled in law to deport such individuals either to Yugoslavia or to Canada. It seems unlikely that in cases where an escape has been effected the Trieste authorities would deport them to Yugoslavia. If, therefore, the

[20] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Who are they? [L.B. Pearson].

[21] Non retrouvé./Not located.

Canadian Government would ultimately have no alternative but to grant Canadian travel documents in Trieste or in any other country to which such individuals might go, then it would appear to me that we are on bad ground in initially refusing either a visa on a Yugoslav travel document or, alternatively, returning to the individual his valid Canadian passport.

3. If this argument is valid both in law and in administrative practice, then it would not appear to me that we are in a position to refuse travel facilities to anyone who obtains the necessary Yugoslav exit permit unless we are prepared to take the further logical step of revoking citizenship. It appears to me that the position is not dissimilar to that mentioned in Paragraph 6 of the Memorandum to the Minister concerning German renegades. However undesirable dual nationals may be from a security point of view, it does not seem that we are on sound ground to refuse travel documents in Belgrade if we are in no position to refuse travel documents once the individual has escaped from the country. In fact, all we are doing is forcing the individual to risk life and limb in escaping to Trieste.

4. If you agree with this point of view, the procedure of categorizing dual nationals in accordance with Paragraph 8 of the Memorandum to the Minister hardly arises except to give guidance to the security authorities on the return of an individual with a bad security record to Canada. I need hardly say that it would be extremely difficult to categorize such individuals as all we would have to go on would be the record of the Canadian security authorities, together with any deductions we are able to make in Belgrade by personal interview with an applicant. Equally we shall only be able to determine whether an applicant has recanted his Communist faith by a similar procedure, which would inevitably be of a somewhat subjective character.

5. In regard to Category A, I feel sure that the Yugoslav authorities are in the best position to determine who are Communists of the Stalinist school and, therefore, unless they slipped up, they would be extremely unlikely to grant Yugoslav passports to persons in this category. In addition, if the Yugoslav authorities know that any dual national is of this particular persuasion, I would expect to find him behind bars rather than in possession of a Yugoslav passport.

6. In regard to Category B, where the Yugoslav authorities grant a Yugoslav passport and exit permit without the intervention of the Canadian Legation . . . ,[22] it seems a valid deduction that they regard such persons as belonging to the Titoist school. In cases where the Legation has intervened officially we may conclude that the individuals fall either in Category B or Category C.

II. Canadian Citizens by Birth

7. Whatever the security record of Canadian citizens by birth may be, I cannot see that we are in a position to refuse travel facilities if the Yugoslav Government grants valid Yugoslav exit permits. Most of the individuals in this category were children when they came here and can hardly be held to be responsible for their actions, especially, as it is true in most of the cases, if they came with their parents.

[22] Les noms ont été omis, conformément à la Loi sur la protection des renseignements personnels. Names deleted in accordance with the provisions of the Privacy Act.

If, however, we decide to grant travel facilities to children and refuse them to their parents, we should be doing the very thing which we have argued with the Yugoslav Government as being undesirable, namely, separating families. You will recall that, especially in the case of prospective immigrants, we have often argued that an immigrant should be allowed to join a husband or family in Canada on humanitarian if not on other grounds. I would, therefore, be somewhat loath to adopt the policy of splitting families or, alternatively, of refusing travel facilities to Canadian-born citizens because the parents have bad security records, thus condemning persons, who would almost inevitably be good Canadian citizens after their experience here, to an extremely difficult life under the present régime.

8. In general I do, of course, appreciate the view put forward in Paragraph 5 of your letter, namely, why should we assist people who are still Communists, who thought they were returning to a Communist paradise. In practice, however, I think it is difficult to apply this principle unless, as I have pointed out above in the case of naturalized Canadians, the Canadian Government is prepared to carry their position to the ultimate logical conclusion of revoking citizenship in all serious security cases.

9. While I shall attempt meanwhile to carry out the instructions in the penultimate paragraph of your letter, I am still not very clear in what type of case the Legation should intervene officially with the Ministry of Foreign Affairs. Meanwhile I am assuming, however, that only those who I am satisfied fall within Category 8(b) and (c) merit our assistance, and even in such cases we should intervene with the Ministry only where the cases seem to the Legation to merit assistance. I also assume that you still wish every case referred to Ottawa before granting travel documents.

10. In regard to the dual nationals in general whom we have examined at the Legation, I am inclined to think that they are either now Titoists or disillusioned Communists. Two or three years of working in this country appears to have a salutary effect on the ideologies of those who have lived in Canada for a number of years. This, of course, is only an impression gained from interviewing various applicants but at the same time I think it is a reasonably valid conclusion.

11. My own preference would be to proceed in all these cases in accordance with the views expressed in Paragraphs 2 and 7 above. I do not take this view out of sympathy for the individuals concerned but merely because I feel we are on bad ground, both in law and practice, in taking any other view.

12. There is one last point . . . [23] namely, that it now appears that the Yugoslav authorities will be unwilling to grant exit visas on Canadian documents. I think, therefore, it would be best to advise dual nationals in future that they should obtain Yugoslav passports with exit permits prior to applying to the Legation for assistance.

13. If the views put forward have merit, I would see the procedure operating as follows:

[23] Les noms ont été omis, conformément à la loi sur la protection des renseignements personnels. Names deleted in accordance with the provisions of the Privacy Act.

(a) Dual nationals presenting valid Yugoslav passports and exit permits, may be granted Canadian entry visas or, alternatively, Emergency Certificates, unless the Canadian Government decides to take steps to revoke citizenship on security or other grounds.

(b) All Canadian born dual nationals will automatically be granted travel documents (Emergency Certificates or entry visas) on presentation of a valid Yugoslav passport and exit visa, or, alternatively, a written statement by the competent authority that an exit visa will be granted on a Canadian document. Where the parents of an infant (in law) are naturalized, we shall proceed as in (a) in respect of the parents.

(c) Where security considerations arise we shall either recommend revocation proceedings (which I assume would be possible in only very few security cases) or furnish a security report for the assistance of the Canadian security authorities.

(d) The Legation will intervene with the Yugoslav Government on behalf of dual nationals only in cases which fall within Categories 8(b) and (c), and which in addition seem to the Legation to merit assistance.

14. I am forwarding under separate cover the list† requested in Paragraph 6 of your letter.

15. I should be grateful if you would let me know in due course the policy ultimately decided upon.

Dear Mr. Crean,

Your letter No. 441 of September 21 concerning the treatment of Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals arrived here at the same time as the enclosed despatch of October 4 was placed on my desk for signature.

After thinking the matter over I have decided to let our despatch go forward to you in its original form. The considerations advanced in your letter will obviously require careful examination and it is likely to be some time before any final answer can be given. In the interim the procedure set out in the attached despatch will provide you with a modus operandi. However, for the present no action will be taken to implement the proposal made in the last sentence of paragraph 7 that our missions be instructed to refer to Ottawa all applications for travel documents from Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals seeking to return to this country.

Yours sincerely,

My letter of August 11, 1950.†

DUAL NATIONALS

In paragraph 7 of the above-mentioned letter it was stated that travel documents might be granted without reference to Ottawa to Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals with adverse security records in Canada, provided you were satisfied that they were former Communists who were known to have recanted their faith.

2. Further consideration has now been given to this matter and it has been decided that in such cases you should report your findings to Ottawa where each case will be decided on its merits.

3. It will be observed therefore that dual nationals who apply to you for travel documents may be divided into three classes:

(1) Persons who because of our information are not cleared for security (i.e. active Communists). You should grant no travel documents to these persons. If you report that they have become anti-Communists we will reconsider our ruling.

(2) Persons who are not active Communists but have associated with Communist-dominated organizations. We will send to you a report on their activities. You should use any available method of checking their present views and if satisfied that they are now anti-Communist you may issue travel documents.

(3) Persons with no record of association with Communists or Communist dominated organizations. You may issue travel documents if you have no evidence of sufficient importance to warrant referring the case to us.

4. I was interested to learn that the Yugoslav authorities have informed you that they do not wish to affix an exit permit to a Canadian document, but prefer to provide those dual nationals permitted to leave the country with Yugoslav passports in which exit permits will then be inserted.

5. There is no objection to advising dual nationals to apply for Yugoslav passports. I think, however, that if we insert returning resident visas in Yugoslav passports it might be construed by the Yugoslav authorities as a departure from the stand we have always taken that these persons are considered to be Canadian citizens under Canadian law.

6. If, therefore, you are holding Canadian passports for persons granted exit permits in Yugoslav passports, I should prefer that you return them their Canadian passports, but provide those for whom you do not hold Canadian passports with Emergency Certificates. However, if you consider that there is danger of the local authorities again impounding the Canadian passports returned to persons granted exit permits, you may at your discretion issue Emergency Certificates and send back to Ottawa the passports you are holding for such individuals in order that the documents may be available for return to them after their arrival in Canada.

7. In cases, however, where you are not authorized to issue travel documents you should not hand over existing travel documents in your possession. When we decide that a given Canadian-Yugoslav dual national is not to receive a travel document, he will not be given one should he apply to another Mission outside Yugoslavia. We are issuing a circular instruction that all applications for travel documents from Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals received at Missions other than yours must be referred to us.

8. You will notice that we make no distinction between Stalinist or Titoist Communists for the purpose of the issuance of travel documents.

DUAL NATIONALS

I have noted from your letter of October 5 that you have my letter No. 441 of September 21 under consideration and that meanwhile I should follow the instructions contained in the above letters. There are, however, one or two comments that I should like to make on your numbered letter.

2. I have assumed that under Para. 3(3), where we are satisfied from examination in Belgrade that applicants have no record of association with Communists or Communist-dominated organizations, we may issue travel documents without reference to Ottawa. I should be grateful if you could confirm this interpretation of your instructions since there are, of course, a number of cases on our files which have never been referred to Ottawa. I have meanwhile interpreted the regulations accordingly. . . . [24]

3. In regard to Paras. 5 and 6, while I can understand your concern that we should take no action which could be considered by the Yugoslav authorities as a departure from our stand that the dual nationals are considered to be Canadian citizens under Canadians law, I think the main point is to get Canadian dual nationals out of Yugoslavia as quickly as possible in cases where you have no objection to facilities being given by the Canadian Legation. I have explained in my letter No. 490 of October 20† my reasons for preferring to give Canadian non-immigrant returning resident visas to persons in the latter category rather than returning valid Canadian passports or, alternatively, granting Emergency Certificates. I feel most strongly that where you have agreed that dual nationals should be assisted in returning to Canada, we should not do anything to complicate their return. I am satisfied from the evidence available to me at the present time that we would do nothing to facilitate the return of such individuals if we return valid Canadian passports or issue Emergency Certificates which will more than likely be impounded by the Yugoslav authorities on leaving Yugoslavia.

4. I should, therefore, be glad if you would leave it to my discretion whether I should return a valid Canadian passport, issue an Emergency Certificate or, alternatively, grant a non-immigrant returning resident's visa in cases which are either approved by Ottawa or fall under Para. 3(3) of the above numbered letter.

5. In regard to the balance of your instructions, I have no comments to make and will endeavour to carry them out in accordance with your wishes.

RETURN TO CANADA OF CANADIAN-YUGOSLAV DUAL NATIONALS[25]

You will recall the discussions which took place last May concerning the return to Canada of Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals. They resulted in a Cabinet directive and subsequent administrative instructions that these people should not be given facilities unless it could be shown that their return to Canada would not be detrimental to the public interest. After some months of experience the difficulties of adhering to this policy are found to be increasing. The attitude of the Yugoslav authorities towards the release of people in this plight has changed somewhat for the better. It is apparent moreover that our own position in the matter now differs from that of both the United Kingdom and the United States. Evidence of the United Kingdom position is provided by the opening paragraph of Circular V94,† issued by the Passport Control Department of the Foreign Office on October 24, 1950, which states: "It has been decided that for all practical purposes Yugoslavia need no longer be regarded as an "iron curtain" country. The Visa Section in Belgrade has been given authority to grant visas to Yugoslav nationals under the ordinary regulations provided that it is clear that the applicant is not a potential defector". The position of the United States Government is clearly indicated by its action in obtaining from the Yugoslavs the promise of the return to the United States of a considerable number of United States-Yugoslav dual nationals. It is possible that were it not for the directive under which we are now working we could obtain parallel action with regard to Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals.

[25] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Mr. Reid, Please speak to me re this. A.D.P. H[eeney] Dec. 30 [1950].

2. Our present procedure with regard to Canadian-Yugoslav dual nationals is as follows:

(a) Canadian Passports Emergency Certificates and visas are refused to all dual nationals who were active members of the Progressive Labour Party or leaders in Communist controlled bodies when they left Canada, unless they can show that they have recanted;

(b) Canadian Passports Emergency Certificates and visas are refused to natural-born Canadians as well as to naturalized ones even though large numbers in the former group are children who can hardly be held responsible on security grounds;

(c) No distinction is made between Titoist and Stalinist Communists for travel document purposes.

3. The difficulties to which I have referred are as follows:

(a) It is, in fact, practically impossible for anyone to decide whether or not an applicant for repatriation has recanted his former Communist faith. More than 1,100 Canadians are affected. A great deal of time is being taken at present by Mr. Crean, the Chargé at Belgrade, in interviewing applicants who increase in numbers. In most cases he is satisfied that there would be no security risk but this cannot be stated with any degree of finality.

(b) We are departing from the long established principle that a citizen is entitled to leave and return to the country of his nationality. It seems evident that the United States based their representations to the Yugoslav authorities on the right of a United States citizen to return to the United States.

(c) It is doubtful whether some of those who have been arbitrarily held by the Yugoslav authorities to be Yugoslav citizens are so in fact. Recently the Yugoslavs have shown some willingness to consider "releasing" them from Yugoslav citizenship. If, however, we prevent them from returning to Canada we shall in effect render them stateless in Yugoslavia, although, should they cross the Yugoslav frontiers we shall have no alternative to giving full recognition to their Canadian status.

(d) Our present policy to all intents and purposes debars us from any approach to the Yugoslav authorities on behalf of any of these people. It will be recalled that both the former Minister at Belgrade and Mr. Sinclair spoke personally about these people to Tito who gave assurances, albeit largely unfulfilled, with regard to them.

4. I doubt that a policy of this kind can be made effective administratively unless it is coupled to a more severe policy regarding revocation of citizenship. This aspect of the matter is under consideration and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has agreed to its study by a small group of officials. As the Canadian Citizenship Act now stands, however, it is impossible to deal with these particular people by revocation or loss of citizenship before 1953 or 1954. It is questionable too whether revocation would be affirmatively considered by Commissions for Inquiry unless it could be shown at a public hearing that the individuals concerned had not only been Communists in the past but were still Communists at the time revocation was instituted. In any event revocation procedure is not applicable to native-born Canadians and those who served in the Canadian Forces are protected against loss of citizenship.

5. I therefore recommend the following for your consideration.

(a) It is desirable to revert in this matter to the established criterion of citizenship rather than security consideration as the basis for decision on the return of individual Canadian citizens to Canada;[26]

(b) As a matter of administrative practice the following would govern:

(i) All Canadian-born dual nationals would be eligible for travel facilities;

(ii) The recommendation of the Mission would be accepted as to whether or not a dual national by naturalization should be granted travel facilities.

6. Subject to your wishes I shall prepare a memorandum for the Cabinet.[27]

I do not see why we should — in principle — assist in any way those Canadians to return to Canada who also have Jugo Slav nationality and who left Canada because of their Communist views. If the Jugo Slav Government can assure us in any particular case that exclusive Canadian nationality is admitted then the situation is different and each such case can be considered simply as that of the Canadian desiring to return. ADMISSION OF UKRAINIANS (SURRENDERED ENEMY PERSONNEL) FROM THE UNITED KINGDOM

The Cabinet Committee on Immigration Policy at its meeting of December 15/48 considered the admission of Ukrainians from among the 8,000 captured in Italy, in German uniform, subsequently transferred to the United Kingdom and detained there as prisoners of war. Because of their service in the German Armed Forces it was then decided aliens in this group should not be admitted to Canada.

Subsequent to this decision most of these aliens were released in the United Kingdom for employment in a civilian capacity and approaches were made by the United Kingdom as to whether Canada would accept:

(a) A proportion of the fit men who were unsuitable for employment in the United Kingdom;

(b) The long term sick who would be maintained by the Ukrainian community in Canada, and

(c) Disabled men who were suitable for light work.

Ukrainian organizations in Canada have urged the admission from this body of Ukrainian individuals — those who have first degree relatives in Canada and others found to come within the admissible classes.

The matter was considered by the Cabinet on September 13th, 1949, (Cab. Doc. 1037) and it was agreed that the admission of individuals from the group in question should be refused.

Under existing directions, aliens of allied or neutral nationality who served with the enemy forces during the War, are not admitted to Canada unless they can definitely establish such service was rendered under compulsion. The group under consideration served voluntarily in the German Armed Forces.

In view of the change in the Immigration Regulations effective March 28th, 1950 (Orders-in-Council P.C. 1606 and P.C. 1608) permitting the admission of Volkdeutsche displaced persons and refugees who acquired German nationality subsequent to September 1st, 1939 and German nationals who are first degree relatives of residents of Canada, it is recommended that Ukrainians who were in the United Kingdom as prisoners of war be admitted to Canada notwithstanding their service in the enemy forces, provided that they come within the admissible classes defined in paragraphs 4 (close relatives of Canadian residents), and 5(c) (farm labourers destined to assured farm employment) of P.C. 2743 of June 22, 1949, and otherwise comply with the provisions of the immigration Act.

CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, May 26, 1950

Dear Mr. Harris,

With reference to our recent conversations, and in the absence of Mr. Pearson, I wish to bring to your attention the results of the enquiries which have been made into the proposed admission to Canada of certain categories of Ukrainians at present in the United Kingdom.

You will recall that Cabinet directed on April 5th that a decision on the matter should be deferred pending a report from the Departments of National Defence and External Affairs. Investigations have now been completed by both the departments concerned as well as by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. The facts appear to be as follows:

The group of Ukrainians now in the United Kingdom, who in 1947 numbered some 8,000 men, are former members of the 1st Ukrainian Division of the Wehrmacht which they are reported to have joined in the belief that the Germans would honour their promises to create an independent Ukraine. The members of this Division appear to have come from that part of Poland which was annexed by the Soviet Union. Hence they are not regarded by the United Kingdom as Soviet nationals or quislings since they do not owe allegiance to any Allied Power and did not collaborate with the Germans during the German invasion of Poland. They did not bear arms against the Western Allies but promptly surrendered to the United Kingdom Forces in Austria at the close of the war.

The proposed Ukrainian immigrants appear to be divided into many groups of a nationalist character. However, there seems to be no connection between these groups and any Ukrainian nationalists organizations in Canada nor is there any indication that at any time they were connected with any Ukrainian or territorists organization that collaborated with the German government in Berlin. Their original cooperation with the Germans was directed to the liberation of the Ukraine from Soviet domination but they turned against the Germans when it became clear that the Germans intended to occupy rather than liberate the Ukraine. They are known to be strongly anti-Soviet and if admitted to Canada it is likely that they would be absorbed into the various politically passive Ukrainian nationalists organizations here who are regarded as loyal to Canada and opposed to Communism.

In the light of the information given above no objection will be taken by this Department to the admission to Canada of the proposed Ukrainian immigrants and, in these circumstances, I believe you may wish to take up the matter again in Cabinet.[28]

Yours sincerely,

A.D.P. HEENEY

RECOGNITION OF NEW GOVERNMENT IN CHINA

Following for Prime Minister from Pearson, Begins: I was much impressed during the Colombo Conference by number and force of arguments marshalled by the United Kingdom and the three Asian Commonwealth representatives in support of decision taken by their Governments to give early recognition to the new Government in China.

2. All other Commonwealth Governments agree to principle of recognition. For them it is just a matter of timing. If we are to get any advantage out of recognition I think we should avoid being last to do so. My present inclination, therefore, is to recommend on my return to Ottawa that we should, without further delay, recognize the new Government.[1]

3. Bevin pointed to failure of policy of non-recognition of Soviet Government after World War I and said that some of the misunderstanding and suspicion which now existed between the Soviet Union and the West could be traced back to this policy; the United Kingdom had, therefore, decided to recognize promptly and to make effort to get along with the new Government. If this policy failed and relations broke down it would not be the fault of the United Kingdom.

4. Nehru said that the Indian people wanted recognition in order to maintain possibility of influencing developments in China. Recognition without some measure of friendliness would be fruitless. While maintaining careful security precautions Nehru argued that best results could be achieved by taking a cautiously friendly policy towards the new Government. Ends.

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL Washington, February 4, 1950

Dear Mr. Heeney:

I am sending forward today in despatch No. 314 a brief review of the situation regarding recognition of the Chinese Communist Government as it appears from here, and should like to supplement this with a few personal comments. To do or not to do at this particular time is obviously a delicate question, and I realize that we have publicly committed ourselves to an early decision. Also, I have no reservations regarding the fundamental soundness of the analysis on which our probable action will be based. Nevertheless, I have an uneasy feeling that we might be better advised to delay our action for a short time, perhaps until the end of March. You are undoubtedly taking into full account the ambiguities and possible difficulties which have appeared in connection with the experience of the British and the Indians in completing their establishment of diplomatic relations. On this score, it would appear to be only prudent to await the complete returns if only as a guide to our own method of approach. These returns may be in very shortly, or it may take a little time for the situation to be completely clarified, but I do think that those of us whose influence, and interests, are not of primary importance in China would be justified in exercising a certain degree of caution and in letting those who have been bold enough to take the first step find out exactly where they are going — or at least how they can get there.

The other thing that worries me slightly is the assessment which should be given to the importance of our timing in relation to Chinese representation on the Far Eastern Commission. This may seem a very minor matter, and one may be inclined to have little sympathy for the tangle in which the Americans have characteristically enmeshed themselves. If, however, we could help to ease a possibly embarrassing situation (and take less risk of jeopardizing our own fund of good will) by means of a brief delay, without seriously affecting our main objective, such a delay might be worthy of consideration.

I offer these comments with some hesitancy, and would not wish to suggest that we do anything which might appear in the light of succumbing to pressure from Washington. On the other hand, looking at the problem in terms of the popular reaction in the United States, recognition of the Peiping regime by Canada within the next few weeks might be subject to more misunderstanding than we need incur. The provocation to the United States in Peiping and the deliberate flouting of the French in Indo-China are still fresh in the public mind, and a good deal has been made of the undignified situation in which those who hastened to grant recognition are alleged to be finding themselves. The factor of self-interest which largely determined the British initiative among the Western nations is not obvious in our case. For us to take at this particular time what would be considered by many a naive step in the dark would probably result in a variety of misrepresentations.

Yours sincerely,

H.H. WRONG

DESPATCH 314 Washington, February 4, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

Sir:

Recognition of Communist China is a dead issue at the moment in the United States. A month ago one might have been justified in predicting that public opinion could have been conditioned to accept recognition within a period of from three to six months. The seizure of United States consular property in Peiping on January 14th, resulting in the withdrawal of United States officials from China, has eliminated the possibility of any action in the near future, and with the elections coming up in November it is most unlikely that the Administration would consider it politic to raise the question, even if it wished to do so, before the end of the year.

2. There have, however, been a few voices crying in the wilderness, and both Walter Lippmann and Marquis Childs[2] have taken the position that the indefinite postponement of recognition is in reality playing into Soviet hands. According to Childs, "The Kremlin does not want United States recognition of China, which would be the first step in a new policy. Neither does an important and highly articulate section of American public opinion. An unhappy fact in the whole China business is the threat of a prolonged and divisive debate within this country. It is already developing into the kind of emotional dispute that has to do not so much with the realities in Asia as with attitudes and opinions here at home". Lippmann makes the same point, stating that "nothing can suit the Kremlin better than that the non-Soviet powers should be divided, that all the Americans should withdraw from China ... that Mr. Acheson and the State Department should spend hours and hours, days and days, thinking about how to answer Mr. Knowland[3] rather than about what to do next about Stalin". Recent events such as the Peiping incident and the recognition of Ho Chi Minh point clearly, in Lippmann's view, to the conclusion that "the immediate and paramount objective of Soviet policy is to isolate China from the non-Communist world" and at the same time divide the non-Communist world over the recognition issue. (The London Economist, in its Foreign Report of January 26, makes a somewhat similar analysis, claiming that the present aim of Soviet policy is to "neutralize" China, along with Germany and Japan.)

[2] Marquis William Childs, chroniqueur pour United Features.
Marquis William Childs, columnist for United Features syndicate.

3. The pattern and timing of recent actions by Moscow and Peiping would certainly seem to support the Lippmann thesis. Unfortunately, as Mr. Acheson has pointed out, it is difficult to go where you are not wanted, and in any event the United States seems to be the prisoner of its past involvements and present emotions to an extent that leaves the Administration little freedom of decision. To the extent that a split in the non-Communist world has been created, which will last for some time to come, Communist tactics have already been successful. How successful they will be in isolating China — except from the United States — remains to be seen, and that is probably the more important of the postulated objectives, since the split need only be as significant as we wish to make it appear. It is generally assumed that the recognition of Ho Chi Minh by both Communist China and the U.S.S.R. was part of this pattern, and that France has been placed in a position where recognition of the Peiping regime is automatically precluded. It may be, however, that neither of these assumptions is correct. According to the British Embassy, the official French position is that although the situation is embarrassing, the arguments in favour of recognition are still valid, and it is still the intention to act on this basis in due course. With regard to the formal support given by the Russians and Chinese to Ho Chi Minh, there is a case to be made for the interpretation that this was motivated by the internal situation in Indo-China, and primarily designed to bolster Ho on the eve of recognition by the Western Powers of Bao Dai.

4. There also seems to be a good deal of uncertainty regarding the present Netherlands position, which is assumed to be linked closely to the attitude of Indonesia. The odds appear to be in favour of recognition, however, especially in view of the influence which Nehru is expected to exert.

5. If recognition by all members of the Commonwealth is only a matter of time, the countries which will follow the United States may be limited to the Latin American states and the Philippines. Actually, recent statements by Mr. Spender and the point of view expressed by the Australian Embassy here would suggest that Australia, at least, will take a good deal of time in coming to a decision, although the Australian (and New Zealand) position might well be influenced by early recognition on the part of Canada.

Senator William Fife Knowland, (Republican), California; Assistant publisher, Oakland Tribune.

6. One aspect of the situation which is anything but a dead issue is the relationship of recognition to Chinese representation on international organizations, and it is rather ironical that in this connection the Far Eastern Commission has suddenly assumed an unaccustomed importance. Only two more countries represented on the Commission need recognize Communist China to achieve the required majority of seven, and if this occurs before a decision on representation has been made in the United Nations the situation may be very embarrassing for the United States. The State Department professes to take this question very seriously, since it would involve the seating of a Chinese Communist representative in Washington under the very noses of Congress, a prospect which is viewed with considerable alarm. One way by which the State Department thinks this embarrassment may be avoided is to establish a connection between the Commission and the United Nations, in general terms, and to try to get a gentleman's agreement among the friendly (but recognizing) powers that no decision be taken in the F.E.C. until after the question has been settled in the larger organization. It is doubtful whether this would be feasible. The United Kingdom delegation takes the view that there are insufficient grounds for establishing such a connection, and that if this situation does arise the United States Government can find means of delaying the arrival of the unwanted representative until the crisis has passed. On the other hand, the Australian delegation tends to view the United States position in this matter rather more seriously, and considers it an important factor in the timing of Australian recognition. One thing the Australian delegation has in mind is the reaction here if the majority on the Commission consisted almost entirely of Commonwealth members plus the U.S.S.R. Since this particular aspect of the problem has not come up before, it might be well to take it into account, for what it is worth, in any consideration which is given to the timing of our own action in granting recognition to the Chinese Communist Government.

7. An early decision by Canada would certainly come as no surprise to the State Department, and should have no appreciable effect on our official relations, although we must naturally expect an adverse reaction in some sections of both Congress and the press in so far as any notice is taken of the event. Actually, beyond the suggestion that we might wish to await the outcome of the current negotiations of the United Kingdom and other recognizing powers with respect to the establishment of full diplomatic relations, there has been little or no effort on the part of the State Department to take the initiative in dissuading us from our course. Officials in the Department have, as you know, presented their point of view when the occasion arose, and reduced to essentials it seems to be that the United States will gain more respect and in the long run exert more influence in China by proceeding with caution and as much dignity as can be mustered in the circumstances. With regard to our position, there is a tendency to question our assumption that it is better to act now rather than later if we are to recognize at all, but, since the first appeal in connection with the Ward case,[4] no suggestion that we would be letting the side down. With respect to Congress and the press, I should imagine that there will be a tendency to construe our action as a misguided tagging along with the United Kingdom, as a result of the Colombo conference, despite the difficulties which the British and the Indians have already encountered in carrying out the "Commonwealth" policy.

I have, etc.

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], February 16, 1950

RECOGNITION OF THE CHINESE COMMUNIST GOVERNMENT

In accordance with your request, the Memorandum to the Cabinet on this subject does not contain a recommendation. You will recall, however, that the Cabinet, at meetings[5] held on November 16, 1949, and December 20, 1949, agreed in principle to recognition of the Communist Government in China but deferred the question of timing. You may consider that the occasion of your return from Colombo, where you gathered the impression that the political arguments in favour of early recognition outweighed the contrary arguments, presents a suitable opportunity for you to advocate in the House of Commons Canadian recognition of the Peiping Government.

2. If the decision is made to accord recognition, it would be advisable, before taking action, to inform other interested and friendly governments, who have previously consulted us in this matter, of our intentions. It might also be well to defer action for two or three weeks in order (1) to examine the feasibility of closing one or more of the Consular establishments in Canada; (2) to watch the outcome of negotiations between the United Kingdom and India and Peiping over procedural matters with regard to the establishment of diplomatic relations; (3) to afford an opportunity for completion of current negotiations being carried on with Lu Tso-fu, President of the Ming Sung Industrial Company, to strengthen the Canadian claim on title to the ships built in Canada for the Ming Sung Company, under a Canadian bank loan guaranteed by the Canadian and Chinese Governments (default on the loan has occurred).

3. As to the method of extending recognition, when the time has been decided upon, this should probably be by communication to Mr. Chou En-lai as Foreign Minister (referring to Mr. Chou's message of October 1 to the Canadian Government),[6] to the effect that we are extending de jure recognition to the "Central Government of the People's Republic of China"; that we are withdrawing recognition from the Nationalist Government; and that we are prepared to send Mr. C.A. CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 55-50 [Ottawa], February 17, 1950

RECOGNITION OF PEIPING REGIME IN CHINA

The "Central Government of the People's Republic of China" was proclaimed in Peiping on October 1st, 1949. The following States have recognized the Peiping regime: Burma, Ceylon, Denmark, India, Israel, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden, Switzerland, United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R. and satellite States and Yugoslavia.

2. It will be recalled that the Cabinet at meetings on November 16, 1949 and December 20, 1949, agreed in principle to the recognition of the Chinese Communist regime but deferred consideration of the question of timing. Arguments for and against extending recognition to the Peiping Government at this time are stated below.

I. ARGUMENTS FOR EXTENDING RECOGNITION

A. Legal

3. The Peiping Government has now apparently fulfilled the usual requirements in international law for de jure recognition. It has effective control over most of China, with, it may be expected, a reasonable prospect of permanency: is itself ostensibly free from direct external control; and governs with the apparent acquiescence of the majority of the population. It is the only alternative to the National Government, whose authority is now limited to the islands of Formosa and Hainan. In short, recognition would be recognition of an established situation and would not imply approval of it.

[6] Voir ibid., document 1047./See ibid, Document 1047.

B. General Political

4. It is known that the Communists in China are relying today upon the assistance of considerable non-Communist elements. Furthermore, natural points of conflict exist between China and Soviet Russia. The according of recognition and the maintaining of relations by the democratic powers might (1) strengthen the position of the non-Communist elements; (2) encourage conditions favourable to the exploitation of the natural points of conflict between China and Russia by keeping open channels for the infiltration of democratic ideas (through the activities of businessmen, missionaries, etc.) and by making it possible for China to look to the West for the imports necessary for her economic well-being. The democratic powers would apparently stand to gain more if this policy were successful and China were kept from full integration with the Soviet Union than they would lose if it failed.

5. If Peiping wishes to pursue a policy not subservient to the Soviet Union (and there are indications that this may be so), international recognition would increase its bargaining power with Moscow. This may be one reason why the U.S.S.R. would prefer non-recognition. It seems that the policy of Moscow now is to isolate its satellites to the greatest possible extent from all democratic contacts. The U.S.S.R. would presumably wish to do this also with China. Non-recognition would, in this case, be playing the Soviet game.

6. The policy of non-recognition of the Soviet Government after World War I was a failure and was responsible for some of the misunderstandings and suspicions which now exist between the Soviet Union and the West.

7. Canadian recognition would probably make it easier for the United States Government to follow suit in due course, which it inevitably must do.

8. If we do not recognize Communist China and, as will probably happen soon, a majority of the members of the U.N. agencies do, our position will be difficult and embarrassing if Communist delegates are invited to represent China at those U.N. agencies.

C. Canadian Considerations

9. If Canada is to derive any advantage from recognition, we should take action before being faced with the necessity of doing so. It is probable that the Chinese Communists will ultimately discriminate against the citizens and interests of non-recognizing powers and force the withdrawal of their diplomatic and consular representatives. This would be detrimental to the activities of the 450-odd Protestant and Catholic missionaries and of Canadian businessmen in China.

10. The Chinese National Government has defaulted on payments of interest and principal of the Sino-Canadian loan of $60,000,000 (1945). The amount of principal and interest on this loan now unpaid is $50,182,674.84. If any part of this outstanding amount is to be paid back, it can only be as the result of re-negotiation with the Communist Government.

II. ARGUMENTS AGAINST EXTENDING RECOGNITION AT THIS TIME.

A. Legal

11. The National Government is still in existence in the Island of Formosa.

B. General Political

12. It may be argued that China, as a Communist State, is a potential enemy and should not be aided either morally or materially.

13. The United States Government is not yet ready to recognize Peiping; this is due to pressure of Congressional and public opinion and to the anti-United States actions of the Chinese Communists.

14. It is not clear that the Chinese Communist Government is willing to assume the international obligations undertaken on behalf of the Republic of China by preceding governments.

15. The United Kingdom and Indian Governments, after according recognition to Peiping, encountered some initial procedural difficulties with regard to the establishment of diplomatic relations.

16. The Nationalist Government of China continues to be represented in U.N. agencies and the Far Eastern Commission and recognition by Canada of the Peiping regime would, for the moment at least, further complicate the position in these bodies.

C. Canadian Considerations

17. Recognition would entail acceptance of Communist diplomatic and consular representatives, who must be expected to exert influence upon the Canadian-Chinese population.

18. Sections of Canadian public opinion might regard recognition of the Chinese Communist regime as signifying approval. Furthermore, Canadian public opinion is susceptible to United States influence (through the media of newspapers, radio, etc.) and the weight of vocal public opinion in the United States is on the whole against extension of recognition at this time.

19. Default has occurred in the loan extended by Canadian banks to the Ming Sung Industrial Company in 1946 to build ships in Canada. This loan was guaranteed by the Canadian and Chinese Governments. Negotiations are under way to strengthen the Canadian claim on title to the ships. It would be advantageous if this could be accomplished before recognition of the Chinese Communist regime.

Note du sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures pour le secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], February 23, 1950

RECOGNITION OF CHINESE COMMUNIST GOVERNMENT

I am attaching a copy of the memorandum of February 16 recommending that recognition be accorded to the Peiping Government in about three weeks time.

2. I discussed with Mr. Menzies and Mr. Campbell your proposal that Cabinet decide now to recognize the Peiping Government but not inform that government of this until Mr. Ronning had been sent up to Peiping to discuss the matter with the authorities there. Mr. Menzies thinks that it is doubtful whether Mr. Ronning could get permission to go to Peiping for this purpose and it is not at all clear on what subjects he could negotiate. The United Kingdom and Indian experience suggests that the best method is to accord recognition and appoint Mr. Ronning Chargé d'Affaires, ad interim and send him to Peiping to discuss with the government there the question of the transfer of the Embassy to Peiping and the change of Chinese representation in Canada. Mr. Ronning does not have the information in Nanking to enable him to discuss assumption by the new government of the Sino-Canadian loan and other obligations. It would appear desirable to assume that as successor government this government would take over all the obligations of the previous government. Negotiations could then take place later when we are able to get full information out to China concerning the items purchased under the loan agreement, etc.

3. In order not to indicate approval of the Communist Government, it is recommended that the government decide not to appoint an Ambassador at this time, although we need not specifically inform the Peiping Government of this intention. This would be in accordance with our practice in Moscow and the eastern European capitals.

4. Administratively, it would be most convenient if the Cabinet could decide now to accord recognition during the week of March 13 or the week of March 20, leaving the exact date to be determined by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. This would give us a target date to aim at in the winding up of outstanding business, enable us to inform other friendly governments of our intentions and have everything ready to inform the Peiping Government and make the public announcement on a fixed date.

CHINESE COMMUNIST-GOVERNMENT; RECOGNITION

24. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of December 21st, 1949, said that there were many arguments both for and against extending recognition to the Chinese Communist Government. After giving serious consideration to all the factors involved, the balance seemed to be in favour of extending recognition at an early date. All developments indicated that such an action would have to be taken sooner or later, and from the Canadian as well as the international point of view there seemed to be every advantage in granting recognition as soon as possible.

It was to be noted that recognition had already been extended to the Peiping regime by the following states — Burma, Ceylon, Denmark, India, Israel, Norway, Pakistan, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom, the U.S.S.R. and satellite states, and Yugoslavia. The United States had not yet taken any action.

An explanatory note had been circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, Feb. 17, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 55-50; departmental memoranda, Feb. 16 and 23, 1950).

25. The Minister of Finance suggested that recognition should not be extended to the Peiping regime until further efforts had been made to minimize to the greatest extent possible Canadian losses arising out of incompleted financial agreements previously entered into either with or through the Nationalist Government.

26. Mr. Pearson felt that, if recognition were approved in principle, it might be extended in the latter part of March and possibly at that time it might be made clear that recognition in no way entailed approval of the Communist regime. It was further suggested that, following recognition, our diplomatic affairs in China be conducted by a chargé d'affaires.

27. The Prime Minister suggested that final decision in this matter be deferred until a later meeting when the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of National Defence were present.

30. The Cabinet, after considerable further discussion, noted the report by the Secretary of State for External Affairs on extending recognition to the Chinese Communist Government and deferred decision to a later meeting when the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of National Defence could be present.

CHINESE COMMUNIST GOVERNMENT; RECOGNITION

3. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of February 23rd, said that a situation might soon arise in one or other of the United Nations organizations that would make it necessary to take action on recognition of the Communist Government of China. There was some risk that the Canadian representative in Nanking, who was accredited to the Nationalist Government, and also the Canadian Consul-General in Shanghai[7] might be asked to leave China if we continued to withhold recognition. If that happened, it might make re-establishment of diplomatic relations more difficult at a later point. It seemed clear that isolation of the present Government through general withdrawal of foreign missions was hoped for by the Soviet Government. For these and other reasons, it seemed desirable that decision be taken on Canadian recognition, which might possibly be accorded toward the end of March.

4. The Prime Minister pointed out that no country in the Western Hemisphere had as yet granted recognition to the Communist Government. It seemed probable that recognition was inevitable but it seemed undesirable for Canada to take the lead in breaking the stalemate that had developed since the first group of countries had recognized the Communist Government. If a situation developed in the United Nations in which our refusal to recognize the Communist Government appeared to jeopardize Canadian participation in the work of the United Nations, it was clear that recognition should be accorded. However, in the meantime, it seemed preferable that Canadian action should wait on the progress of events.

5. The Cabinet, after considerable discussion, agreed that decision as to the recognition of the Communist Government of China be deferred pending further consideration at a subsequent meeting.

TELEGRAM 27 Nanking, March 28, 1950

Your telegram No. 28 of March 22nd.†

I sincerely hope that decision to extend recognition will be made as soon as United Kingdom has concluded present negotiations in Peking and question of Peking's representatives to United Nations Organization is settled.

2. I am still of the opinion expressed in my telegram No. 173 of November 4th, paragraph 5, only I should have said that benefit to be derived from recognition would be in inverse proportion to "the square" of length of time we delay. China is falling into the embrace of Russia more rapidly than I anticipated.

3. The failure of western nations to recognize the power of the revolution and the strength of the new regime and failure to grant recognition to new Government as soon as it was formed, coupled with the withdrawal of American representatives from China and continued indirect support of Chiang Kai Shek's blockade and air raids, have played into the hands of Russia and created a situation which will take years to rectify. The picture might have been quite different if recognition by Western Powers had taken place prior to Mao's departure for Moscow.

4. The general statements contained in paragraph 2 of my telegram No. 196 of December 28th are still true with two amendments:

(a) Prices seem stabilized and inflation effectively controlled;

(b) There has been an increase in the number of beggars from districts where famine prevails and from districts denuded of grain to support army in military campaigns of last winter.

With greatly improved transportation facilities and increased attention to production of agricultural products, the food problem, which is most pressing now, will probably be solved in a few months. The new regime is in firm control, although there are areas suffering from maladministration due to lack of experienced administrators. Reports from [group corrupt] by reliable neutral observers describe progress and improvement in living conditions of the people.

5. Great preparations are being made for the invasion of Taiwan. In Nanking a railway spur has been built to outer airfield where planes are being assembled by three hundred Russian technicians. Reports state similar preparations are being made in a number of other centres. Wooden seaworthy vessels are being shipped south by rail in great quantities through here.

SECRET Ottawa, March 30, 1950

REPRESENTATION OF CHINA IN THE UNITED NATIONS

The present situation in the United Nations is so unsatisfactory and potentially so dangerous that I believe it warrants a new attempt to secure Cabinet approval for Canadian recognition of Communist China.

2. So long as China is represented in United Nations organs and specialized agencies by delegates of the discredited and virtually defunct Nationalist regime, there is always the danger that the Soviet Union may use this as a pretext for withdrawing finally from the United Nations. I do not myself believe that this danger is imminent. But Mr. Holmes has reported (in a letter to me dated March 21, 1950) that, according to Sir Terence Shone[8] in New York, Mr. Bevin is very apprehensive on this score. Certainly it is a possibility which cannot be entirely ruled out. And it will be agreed, I think, that if the Soviet Union were to withdraw finally from the United Nations, it would be very unfortunate if the break were to come over this issue.

3. More serious, perhaps, is the fact that the presence in United Nations bodies of representatives of the Nationalist Government is bringing the work of the organization closer and closer to a standstill. At any time such a situation would be unfortunate, since inevitably it tends to bring the United Nations as a whole into disrepute. The disadvantages of stalemate and inactivity at the present time, however, are even greater than that. Public opinion both here and in the United States is such that it seems necessary to take some initiative towards re-opening negotiations with the Soviet Union. The most convenient and least embarrassing forum for such negotiations is within the United Nations. As matters stand at present, however, it is impossible to pursue with any real hope of success the various initiatives which have been suggested until the position within the United Nations has been regularized. Neither the proposal to hold a meeting of the Assembly in Moscow, not to resume informal conversations on atomic energy, nor to convene an extraordinary meeting of the Security Council at which Foreign Ministers would attend, is likely to be effective either in making genuine progress towards a comprehensive agreement with the Soviet Union or even in convincing opinion in the West that everything possible is being done by their governments to promote such an agreement.

4. The core of the difficulty may be defined by a reference to Mr. Acheson's statement at a press conference on February 8 when he said in words which have since received wide currency, "We have seen also that agreements reached with the Soviet Government are useful when those agreements register facts or a situation which exists, and that they are not useful when they are merely agreements which do not register the existing facts". One of the important facts of the present situation is that China has fallen into Communist hands. Unless this fact is admitted, it is vain, I think, to hope that any progress can be made towards reaching an agreement with the Soviet Union.

5. Further, it is doubtful whether an attempt to re-open negotiations with the Soviet Union before the position of Communist China in the United Nations has been established would be effective in countering the Soviet propaganda line that it is the Soviet Union alone which is prepared to assist in reducing the present tensions. A proposal, for example, to hold informal conversations on atomic energy, possibly under the auspices of the United Nations, on a Five-Power basis excluding China, might create in the public mind the impression that an unfair effort was being made to consider a matter of vital importance without the representatives of the world's most populous nation and at the same time to deprive the Soviet Union in such negotiations of the support which it might properly expect to receive from a country which would be in sympathy with its general point of view.

6. If it is agreed that any of the initiatives which have been suggested are likely to be still-born until Communist China has taken its place in the United Nations, the crucial question is, How can this change best be affected? It now seems clear that, unless a number of additional governments of their own motion decide to recognize the Peking regime, activity within the United Nations will continue to be as completely frustrated as it is at present. We have attempted without success to induce other countries to agree to recognize Communist China simultaneously with ourselves. The United Kingdom have tried in vain to persuade wavering members of the Security Council to vote in favour of seating the representative of Communist China. The Secretary-General has advanced a legal argument which might make such action in the Security Council easier for countries which have not themselves recognized the Peking Government. All to no avail. One other possibility remains — that the Secretary-General should circularize member governments and invite them to state whether they would be in favour of seating the representatives of the new Government in Peking. This tactic has not yet been tried and it may be that at some point it should be attempted. There are strong reasons, however, for thinking that it would be ineffective. Countries which have not yet recognized the Peoples' Government in Peking would very probably either abstain in such a plebiscite or indeed not answer the Secretary-General's communication at all.

7. In these circumstances, it seems clear that the only positive action which the Canadian Government can itself take to create a more normal state of affairs within the United Nations and so to set the scene for a resumption of negotiations with the Soviet Union, is to announce its recognition of the People's Government in the hope that such action would be followed by other governments and would result before many weeks in a change of Chinese representation within the United Nations. Sooner or later the Canadian Government will recognize the new regime in Peking. The present situation in the United Nations argues strongly, I would urge, for recognition sooner rather than later.

8. If you agree that there is merit in this line of reasoning, I would suggest that the most appropriate moment at which to raise the question in Cabinet again would be early next week, after you have been in New York yourself and are able to speak with personal authority about the present paralysis within the United Nations.

CHINESE COMMUNIST GOVERNMENT — RECOGNITION

It will be recalled that at previous meetings the Cabinet agreed, in principle, to recognition of the Chinese Communist regime, but decided to give further consideration to the question of timing. The easy conquest of the Island of Hainan by Chinese Communist forces has made more apparent the inability of the fugitive National Government to continue effective resistance.

2. One of the main reasons for hesitancy in the matter of Canadian recognition of the new regime in China has been the difficulties and delays in which the United Kingdom has become involved, after according recognition, while negotiating in Peiping for the establishment of full diplomatic relations. The Canadian Government would not wish to be placed in a similar embarrassing position.

3. In order to avoid this, it is suggested that a different approach to the problem might be made. Our representative in China (Mr. Ronning) might make an oral communication to the appropriate official in Nanking to the effect that:

(i) he had been instructed by the Canadian Government to inform the responsible Chinese authorities that consideration was being given to the simultaneous announcement of recognition of the Central Government of the People's Republic of China and agreement between the two governments to exchange diplomatic missions;

(ii) he had been authorized to proceed to Peiping to discuss in advance questions which might be raised by the two governments in this connection;

(iii) the Canadian Government would first wish to know whether such a procedure would be agreeable to the Peiping authorities.

4. Mr. Ronning would be asked to seek assurance in advance of recognition that the Peiping Government would assume obligations (itemized in Appendix A) which the Nationalist Government had undertaken in its relations with Canada. The only modification would be a reduction of $10 million in the loan that the Nationalists spent for military equipment.

5. By this method of approach our representative in China would have a certain amount of bargaining power in his hands when he proceeded to Peiping. It would not, of course, mean immediate recognition, even if the Peiping regime should agree to the suggested procedure, since some time would be necessary to carry out the negotiations. Moreover, the Peiping authorities would undoubtedly raise questions of their own, but some of these might be anticipated, having already been taken up with other recognizing governments.

6. It is recommended that our representative in Nanking be instructed to approach the Chinese Communist authorities on the subject of relations with the Peiping regime, in the manner outlined in paragraph 3 above. A further report would be made to Cabinet on the results of the preliminary negotiations.

MATTERS WHICH MIGHT BE DISCUSSED WITH PEIPING AUTHORITIES BY MR. RONNING

It is considered that Mr. Ronning might take up the following points with the Peiping authorities:

(a) The Canadian announcement of recognition, when and if that was finally agreed upon, would designate Mr. Ronning as Chargé d'Affaires a.i. and would include withdrawal of recognition from the National Government in Formosa.

(b) Canadian representatives would be instructed to support resolutions in international bodies calling for the seating of Peiping representatives, provided the proper procedures in making application were followed and that the body was competent to determine its own membership.

(c) The Canadian Government would be prepared to accept a diplomatic mission in Ottawa and a Consulate General in Vancouver, representing the Peiping Government, and to guarantee them the usual privileges.

(d) The Canadian Government would expect facilities for the transfer of the Canadian Embassy from Nanking to Peiping and the usual privileges attached to the work of a diplomatic mission and to that of a Consulate General in Shanghai.

(e) The Canadian Government, having long accorded Chinese citizens in Canada general freedom of travel, residence and carrying on their legitimate occupations, would expect reciprocal treatment for Canadians, in China, in accordance with the provisions of the 1944 Treaty for the Relinquishment of Extra-territorial Rights.

(f) The Canadian Government would expect the Peiping Government to assume responsibility for approximately $40 million of the Sino-Canadian loan of February 1946,[9] being that portion which has used for the purchase of items in Canada other than military equipment.

(g) The Canadian Government would expect the Peiping Government to take over the guarantee of credit of $12,750,000 extended to the Ming Sung Industrial Company for the construction of vessels in Canada.

(h) the Canadian Government would be prepared to enter into normal commercial relations with the new government in China and for this purpose would be prepared to grant most-favoured-nation treatment to Chinese imports in Canada, in exchange for reciprocal rights and privileges in China, as provided in the commercial modus vivendi signed in September 1946.[10]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS; RELATIONS WITH COMMUNIST CHINA

14. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to discussion at the meeting of March 10th, said that one of the main reasons for hesitancy in Canadian recognition of the Communist regime in China had been the difficulties and delays which the United Kingdom had experienced, after according recognition, while negotiating in Peiping for the establishment of full diplomatic relations. In order to avoid placing Canada in a similar embarrassing position, it was suggested that the Canadian representative in China might make an oral communication to the appropriate official in Nanking to the effect that the Canadian Government were giving consideration to the question of a simultaneous announcement of recognition of the Central Government of the People's Republic of China, and agreement between the two governments to exchange diplomatic missions, and that before he proceeded to Peiping the Canadian Government would wish to know if such a procedure would be agreeable to the authorities there.

The Canadian representative would be asked to seek assurance in advance of recognition that the Peiping Government would assume obligations which the Nationalist Government had undertaken in its relations with Canada. The only modification would be a reduction of $10 million in the Canadian loan, representing the amount spent by the Nationalist Government for military equipment.

It was felt that by this method of approach our representative to China would have a certain amount of bargaining power in his hands when he proceeded to Peiping.

An explanatory memorandum was circulated.

(Minister's memorandum, May 4, 1950 — Cab. Doc. 135-50).

15. The Minister of National Defence suggested that it was unlikely that the Peiping Government would agree to such terms. From our knowledge of the Communist attitude and mentality, he felt that there was a possibility that they would be rejected. It was also possible that the Canadian representative might be expelled from China. This would prejudice our relations with the Communist regime in the future and would put us in an embarrassing position when Communist China was recognized by a majority of the members of the United Nations.

16. Mr. Pearson said that we could either proceed in the manner suggested, or recognize the Peiping Government unconditionally. If our terms were rejected, we would maintain our present position. When general acceptance of the Communist regime occurred we would be acting as part of a group and our position would not be prejudiced by virtue of an early rejection which would probably by that time be largely forgotten.

It was questionable how long the Canadian representative would be permitted to stay in Nanking without recognition by Canada of the Communist regime. If he were expelled, then there would be no chance of informal discussions.

17. Mr. Pearson felt there was some possibility that the Communists would accept the Canadian terms if we made the attempt. However, he suggested we might avoid some of the dangers and yet reap some of the benefits of the course suggested if the Canadian representative were instructed to have an informal talk with the senior Chinese official in Nanking, without any sort of commitment, indicating that one of the reasons why Canada had hesitated in the matter of recognition resulted from doubt as to the stand the Communist regime would take with regard to a number of related matters. When we had a report of this conversation, we might be in a better position to decide what further action, if any, should be taken.

18. The Cabinet, after further discussion, agreed that the Canadian representative in China approach the senior Chinese official in Nanking in order to determine, on a completely informal basis and without commitment, the stand that the latter's government were liable to take with regard to obligations which Canada would require of the Peiping Government before considering recognition.

CHINA — RELATIONS WITH PEKING GOVERNMENT

Canadian Proposals

As a result of the decision taken by the Cabinet on May 4, the Canadian representative in China, Mr. C.A. Ronning, was authorized unofficially to ascertain the reaction of the Foreign Nationals Bureau to the suggestion that informal discussions might be held in advance of a possible simultaneous announcement of Canadian recognition and of the establishment of diplomatic relations between Ottawa and Peking. Mr. Ronning indicated that the preliminary discussions might include both procedural matters (in connection with the establishment of relations) and certain other substantive matters, such as reciprocal treatment of citizens, commercial modus vivendi and acceptance of responsibility for the non-military portion of the Sino-Canadian loan.

Peking's Attitude

2. Peking's attitude towards these proposals, as conveyed to Mr. Ronning, is as follows:

(a) The Ministry of Foreign Affairs would welcome a Canadian representative to Peking, if the Canadian Government would "formally indicate its desire to recognize."

(b) Only preliminary and procedural matters should be discussed before recognition; the other points raised by Mr. Ronning should be taken up after the establishment of diplomatic relations.

3. The conclusion therefore is that, while the proposals made as a result of the Cabinet's decision of May 4 have not been fully accepted, nevertheless Peking does concede that negotiations might be undertaken on procedural matters and agreement reached prior to the announcement of recognition. This means that we should not be subject to the difficulties in which the United Kingdom was involved after extending recognition.

Future Action

4. We are now faced with the alternatives of permitting Mr. Ronning to proceed with preliminary procedural negotiations in Peking or of taking no further action now and playing for time. It would not seem wise to reject Peking's proposal outright. The following considerations may be adduced in favour of authorizing Mr. Ronning to state orally to the Peking authorities that the Canadian Government is prepared to announce recognition of the Central Government of the People's Republic of China, when agreement has been reached on the establishment of diplomatic relations:

A. Political

(i) In recognizing the Peking Government soon the Canadian Government would do its part in resolving the dangerous deadlock existing in the United Nations over the question of Chinese representation. If action to this end is not taken soon it seems unlikely that it would have time to have effect before the meeting of the General Assembly. Canadian action in the near future would be only one of several factors now pointing towards the solution of the crisis. Mr. Bevin has recently announced that the United Kingdom is in favour of the admission of the Chinese Communist representatives. Moreover, there have been indications that France and Egypt (both members of the Security Council) are contemplating extending recognition to Peking. Such an action by either of these countries would mean the creation in the Security Council of a majority of states which have recognized the Peking Government. The United States has already announced that it would accept a majority decision of the Security Council on this matter.

(ii) Independent action now by Canada would counter propaganda that Canada is merely a satellite of the United States.

(iii) This course is strongly urged by both our representatives in China, Mr. Ronning in Nanking and Dr. Patterson, the Consul General in Shanghai.

(iv) Intelligence sources agree that the fall of Formosa appears imminent. If we were to recognize only after the final extinction of the refugee Nationalist Government, we should probably find the Communists much more difficult to deal with.

(v) No useful purpose would now be served by insisting on prior discussion of the substantive questions tentatively raised by our representative in Nanking (see Para. 1 above). Mr. Ronning's opinion is that Peking would never agree to deal with these matters before the establishment of relations. This is consistent with Peking's attitude towards other powers. With regard to acceptance of responsibility by Peking for the non-military portion of the Sino-Canadian loan, it is encouraging to note that foreign exchange has been made available by Chinese Communist officials to the Ming Sung Industrial Company Limited for the servicing of the loan extended to the company by Canadian banks.

5. It is recommended, therefore, that Mr. Ronning be authorized to state orally to the Peking authorities that the Canadian Government is prepared to announce recognition of the Central Government of the People's Republic of China, if and when a satisfactory agreement has been reached on the establishment of diplomatic relations, and that the Canadian Government is willing to send him to Peking for preliminary negotiations. In the course of such preliminary negotiations, Mr. Ronning might be authorized to state that:

(a) The Canadian announcement of recognition would designate him as Chargé d'Affaires a.i., and would include withdrawal of recognition of the Nationalist Government in Formosa.

(b) The Canadian Government would be prepared to accept a diplomatic mission in Ottawa and a Consulate General in Vancouver, representing the Peking Government, and to grant them the usual privileges.

(c) The Canadian Government would expect facilities for the transfer of the Canadian Embassy from Nanking to Peking and the customary privileges attached to the work of a diplomatic mission and to that of a Consulate General in Shanghai.[11]

CHINA; RECOGNITION OF PEKING GOVERNMENT

23. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the discussion at the meeting of June 14th, 1950, reported on recent developments. The Canadian representative in Nanking had recently been served notice that taxes would have to be paid on Canadian Government property in that city for the year 1949. A payment of approximately $400 in U.S. funds was required before June 25th. Inasmuch as Canada had not yet recognized the Peking regime, it was felt that the taxes should be paid, but under protest.

(External Affairs memorandum, June 20, 1950)†

In so far as recognition of the Peking Government was concerned, it was suggested that the Canadian representative in Nanking be authorized to state orally to the Peking authorities that the Canadian Government was prepared to announce recognition of the Central Government of the People's Republic of China, if and when a satisfactory agreement had been reached on the establishment of diplomatic relations, and that the Canadian Government was willing to send him to Peking for preliminary negotiations. During such negotiations, Mr. Ronning might be authorized to state:

(a) that the Canadian announcement of recognition would designate him as Chargé d'Affaires a.i., and would include withdrawal of recognition of the Nationalist Government in Formosa;

(b) that the Canadian Government would be prepared to accept a diplomatic mission in Ottawa and a Consulate General in Vancouver, representing the Peking Government, and to grant them the usual privileges; and

(c) that the Canadian Government would expect facilities for the transfer of the Canadian Embassy from Nanking to Peking and the customary privileges attached to the work of a diplomatic mission and to that of a Consulate General in Shanghai.

[11] Décision reportée par le Cabinet le 14 juin 1950./Decision deferred by Cabinet, June 14, 1950.

24. Mr. Pearson reported further that the United Kingdom had now decided that it would vote for the unseating of the Nationalist Government delegate when this question was next raised at the Economic and Social Council.

25. The Minister of Agriculture felt that in order to avoid unfavourable domestic reactions, it might be preferable to withhold recognition of the new regime until such time as recognition became virtually inescapable.

26. The Prime Minister pointed out that if the Canadian representative in Nanking were authorized to open negotiations as recommended, the Government would have to be prepared to extend recognition reasonably soon after successful conclusion of such negotiations, whether or not at that time the Peking regime had been recognized by a majority of Western countries.

27. The Cabinet, after considerable further discussion, deferred decision on recognition of the Central Government of the People's Republic of China until a meeting early the following week.

RELATIONS WITH PEKING GOVERNMENT

The attack on the Republic of Korea by North Korean communist forces has added complications to the question of relations with the Peking regime in China. Public opinion would probably not be favourable to the opening of negotiations with Peking at this time. The alternatives open to us would seem to be either to defer a decision on relations with the Peking Government until the issues of the Korean crisis have become clarified, or to decide that recognition is now impossible, owing to the North Korean aggression, and to withdraw our officials from China.

2. The following arguments appear to me to weigh heavily against withdrawing from China at this time:

(i) The interests of Canadian missionaries and businessmen in China would be left without protection for an indefinite time.

(ii) Canadian property in Nanking would probably be confiscated, resulting in the loss of a considerable investment.

(iii) It would probably be made very difficult for us to return to China in the future, should we desire to do so.

(iv) There is as yet no evidence of China's complicity in the North Korean action. It should be remembered that North Korea is a closely integrated puppet state, apparently subject to direct Soviet orders, which China ostensibly is not. Peking leaders have assailed the United States for its action with regard to Formosa, but they have said very little about Korea. It is indeed very possible that Peking does not approve the Soviet-inspired Korean action, since it has resulted in United States protection being given Formosa and rendered infinitely more difficult the fulfilment by Communist China of its avowed purpose to gain control of what is considered to be a Chinese island. In other words, this may well be an unpalatable demonstration to Peking that Soviet and Chinese interests in the East are not always compatible.

(v) The main thesis upon which the principle of remaining in China had been accepted is still valid, i.e., that it cannot further the interests of the democratic countries to ignore the existence of 450 million Chinese; that to combat communism in the East the democratic powers should maintain and deepen their contacts rather than abrogate them. The game would seem to be worth the candle, as far as China is concerned, so long as the degree of intimacy between China and the Soviet Union remains uncertain. Withdrawal by the Western Powers would probably be consonant with Soviet hopes. It is not inconceivable that one of the motives of the Soviet-inspired move by North Korea was a desire to draw harder and faster lines between China and the democracies. Prime Minister Nehru has counselled against the danger of placing the Korean action in faulty perspective and allowing the issues in other parts of the East to become obscured as a consequence.

(vi) The only apparent solution to the deadlock in the United Nations is for Communist China to be seated. I would suggest that the responsibility for making this solution impossible should not be taken by the Western powers. As you observed at your recent press conference, it might have been preferable had Russia been participating in the United Nations at the time of the Korean attack, so that the Soviet Union would have been forced to take a public stand on the matter of the Korean aggression and would have been unable to lurk in the background.

3. For the above reasons it might be desirable to delay taking a decision regarding our affairs in China until

(i) The immediate crisis in Korea is over,

(ii) Communist China's attitude towards the Korean action becomes clearer, and

(iii) Peking's reaction to the United Kingdom's most recent expression of views regarding recognition is known. (You will recall that the United Kingdom Chargé d'Affaires had been instructed to query Peking as to whether they sincerely desired the establishment of diplomatic relations.)

4. Mr. Ronning might be informed of our reasons for deferring a decision. He might also be instructed that, if questioned as to the reasons for delay in proceeding with negotiations, he might indicate to the local officials, on a personal basis, that the Canadian Government found it necessary to consider the implications of the attack on the Republic of Korea and was examining anew, in the light of this occurrence, the whole situation in the Far East; the Government therefore had not yet been able to take a decision regarding recognition.[12]

5. The tone of recent telegrams from Mr. Ronning has suggested that he may be suffering some mental strain, as a result of the prolonged period of waiting in Nanking in uncertain circumstances. It might be desirable to send a personal message to Dr. Patterson in Shanghai, asking for his opinion as to Mr. Ronning's health and ability, from that point of view, to remain longer in Nanking. We might also seek Dr. Patterson's reaction to the possibility that, if it were decided to withdraw Mr. Ronning for health reasons, he (Dr. Patterson) might be asked to obtain permission from the authorities to go to Nanking to take over as officer in charge. If Mr. Ronning were to return for health reasons, it would be necessary, I think, either to send a successor to Nanking or else to recall all our officials from China. To withdraw Mr. Ronning without sending a successor would be interpreted by Peking as a definite closing of the door to recognition. Under these circumstances conditions would, I imagine, be made intolerable for Dr. Patterson and Mr. Ballachey[13] in Shanghai.

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to Canadian policy on exports to Communist China of potential war material. As you know, this material has been considered in three categories:

arms and ammunition;

machinery and its components and material used primarily for military purposes (United States 1A list); and machinery and its components and materials that may be used for both civilian and military purposes (United States 1B list).[14]

2. We now completely prohibit the export to Communist China of munitions and 1A materials, and shall continue to do so, but the Department of Trade and Commerce here has been receiving various enquiries from firms who wish to ship to China goods which come under the United States 1B list.

3. Shipments to Eastern Europe of materials on the 1B list have been allowed if such shipments have been part of normal trade, if the quantities are reasonably normal, and if the Department of Trade and Commerce has reasonable assurance that these exports are in fact destined for civilian and not military use. Our criteria for approving such shipments to China will remain the same as that for shipments to Eastern Europe. To some extent, these criteria will have to be applied to shipments of strategic materials to Hong Kong, as there is much trans-shipment to Communist China from Hong Kong. The quantities of materials normally used by Hong Kong will be determined so that we may have some idea of what proportion of goods shipped to Hong Kong is actually trans-shipped to Communist China.

4. Taking into consideration however the slighter possibility of trans-shipment of these goods to the U.S.S.R. from China and the probability that China will be an important market for products of Japanese heavy industry, officials of Trade and Commerce will be less strict in their interpretation of these criteria when considering shipments to Communist China.

5. It seems likely, therefore, that, in our method of control of exports to China, we will not, for the time being, follow United States practice as closely as we have in dealing with other problems of export control; our practice in this instance will probably be more similar to that of the United Kingdom.

6. I understand that the United Kingdom and the United States have been discussing a joint approach to France, Belgium and the Netherlands regarding prohibition of the export to China of strategic materials in the United States 1A list; that the United Kingdom have agreed to co-operate with the United States and the Netherlands on the questions of control of exports of petroleum to China, and that they have agreed to watch the quantities of shipments to China of goods which are on the 1B list.

7. We were informed by the Canadian Ambassador in Washington that there was some difference of opinion between the United Kingdom and the United States on the wording and form of the communication which should go to the three European Governments concerning the prohibition of exports of the 1A items, and I note that at the Paris meetings in January on the control of exports to Eastern Europe, the delegates of the United States and the United Kingdom stated that they were not in a position to discuss export controls to China.

8. I should be glad to have from you some indication of the progress the United Kingdom and the United States are making in these informal approaches and of the

DESPATCH 568 London, March 15, 1950

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 655 of March 7th concerning policy on exports of potential war material to Communist China.

2. A member of my staff has taken up the questions raised in your despatch with Mr. A.E. Percival, the Under-Secretary at the Board of Trade concerned with Far Eastern matters.

3. Since the talks between the United States and United Kingdom involve several Departments Mr. Percival is consulting with them regarding the present position before giving us a progress report. He will let us have something on this aspect of your inquiry within the next few days.

4. On the manner in which the United Kingdom are administering the 1B list in respect of Communist China, Percival states that their practice is the same as for the Eastern European countries. They are keeping a watch on the volume of shipments of 1B goods to China, but are not controlling individual shipments. If it appears that such shipments from the United Kingdom are abnormally large, they will consult with the other countries to ascertain whether their shipments of the same commodities to China are also excessive. If it develops that the aggregate of shipments is larger than the normal Chinese intake, it may then be necessary to transfer the commodity to the 1A list and prohibit its export to China while also bringing exports to other destinations formally under control. Alternatively, Percival suggests that in those circumstances the solution may be not to prohibit further shipments altogether, but to set a ceiling for further shipments to China from all the participating countries and then possibly to allocate that maximum amount among the participants. In any event, no case of an apparently abnormal volume of shipments has so far arisen. Meanwhile the ordinary "watching" procedure is being followed in the case of all 1B exports to Communist China.

5. Percival indicated that some unpleasantness had developed with the United States recently over proposed shipments of steel rails to China. The United Kingdom were allowing their firms to tender on the Chinese order since rails are not on the 1A list and the order appeared to be of reasonable size. At the same time Western German firms were being prevented from tendering for the reason that the United States requested the German authorities to regard these rails as though they were on the 1A list. As a consequence there were rumours in Washington that the United Kingdom were taking advantage of the Germans. The United Kingdom position, however, was that if a commodity was to be considered as on the 1A list it should be put on that list in order that Governments might know where they stood in relation to one another and in relation to their own firms. So long as a commodity remained on the 1B list it had to be treated in the same way as other 1B commodities. Eventually the United States authorities appear to have relented, and to have allowed the Western German firms to tender for at least 15,000 tons of the total of 50,000 tons of rails which the Chinese were after. Apart from this incident, according to Percival, the procedure with respect to Communist China has been working reasonably satisfactorily.

SECRET Washington, June 2, 1950

Dear Wynne [Plumptre]:

We are sending up by tomorrow's bag a despatch on the subject of the joint approach of the United States and the United Kingdom to France, Belgium and the Netherlands regarding the control of exports to China.

2. After the meeting with the State Department officials on this subject I had lunch with Willis Armstrong, Associate Chief, Economic Resources and Security Staff, Office of Transport and Communications Policy, who you may have met in Ottawa when he was up in connection with the general problem of export control procedures. He has just returned from Europe, and while in Paris talked with the Chairman of the Coordinating Committee of the Paris group on export controls, who told him that the Danish representative had recently complained that there seemed to be a United States block on this subject, since the representatives at Paris of both Canada and Italy seemed to follow the United States policy right down the line and never expressed any independent points of view. Armstrong suggested, purely personally, that this may have a somewhat unfortunate effect in the Paris discussions, and that it might not be a bad idea if, on occasion, we were ready to take a somewhat different stand from the United States — provided, of course, we had any reason for doing so. I only mention this because I thought his comments might be of some interest, and because it would appear from your despatch No. 655 of March 7th to London that we do have a different approach from that of the United States in connection with the control of 1B items to China. This, of course, will probably have no bearing on the Paris discussions with respect to China, since I believe they are generally limited to prohibited items only.

3. During the course of the meeting in the State Department I raised the question of the position of Japan, and it was admitted that this may create a certain amount of difficulty. The inclination of the United States is obviously to use SCAP's authority to apply United States policies on both 1A and 1B items in connection with exports from Japan to Communist China. It can be expected that, insofar as the 1B list is concerned, this will not be too popular with the Japanese, who are in the position to build up a fairly substantial trade with the Chinese, particularly in the field of transportation equipment. There have already been reports of Japanese dissatisfaction with United States policies in this regard. It is expected, however, that eventually the control of 1B items from Japan will probably be equated in practice to the policies adopted by the United Kingdom and Western European countries rather than those of the United States.

4. Another question which concerns us is the nature of our relationship at this stage to the informal agreement between the United States, the United Kingdom, France and Belgium on export controls to China, since we are actually carrying out these controls but have not been mentioned in connection with any of the discussions with the European group. I do not know whether this is of any importance or not, but you might wish to let us know whether we should be kept out of the picture until such time as the subject is introduced in the wider Paris group.

Yours sincerely,

RALPH COLLINS

DESPATCH 1405 Washington, June 2, 1950

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your despatch No. 656 of March 7th† requesting information regarding the joint approach of the United States and the United Kingdom to France, Belgium and the Netherlands in connection with the control of exports to China, and to my WA-597 of March 9† on this subject.

2. We are now informed by the State Department that the joint approach was finally made early in April, and that favourable replies have been received. The United States Embassy in London has been instructed to coordinate with the Foreign Office final arrangements for putting into effect the informal agreement on controls between the five countries concerned. The United States also expect to obtain agreement on exchange of information regarding shipments to China of a selected group of items from the United States 1B list.

3. It is anticipated that the controls on exports to China, which will cover the list of items now denied to certain Eastern European countries as a result of the Paris meetings, will be put in force by France, Belgium and the Netherlands within the next few weeks. The question of extending the number of countries exercising such controls will then be brought before the consultative committee of the Paris group. Approaches will also be made to Indonesia and Indo-China. At the request of the Netherlands authorities, the approach to the Indonesians will be made by the United States and the United Kingdom, but Indo-China will be handled by the French.

4. The United States has also undertaken the responsibility of seeking the co-operation of the Philippine Government in this respect. The difficulty has been that specific legislation will be required in the Philippines before export controls can be imposed, and there is some apprehension regarding the security problem thus presented. It is hoped, however, that this can be avoided by phrasing the proposed legislation in rather general terms and arranging for the specific controls through consultation with the United States, in such a manner that it will not be necessary to disclose the full range of the United States 1A list.

5. You will recall that there has been a difference of opinion between the United States and the United Kingdom on the subject of the export of prohibited items to areas controlled by the Chinese Nationalist Government, the United States adopting the position that such exports should be licensed, after careful scrutiny, where it serves the interests of one or more of the co-operating Governments to do so. Although this will continue to be the policy of the United States, it is our understanding that France, Belgium and the Netherlands will probably follow the United Kingdom.

6. We shall be obtaining a copy of the final text of the informal memoranda presented by the United States to France, Belgium and the Netherlands, and shall forward this as soon as it is received. It is also expected that we shall be having further discussions with the State Department in the near future regarding their present policy in connection with control of the export of 1B items to China. It would be appreciated, therefore, if you would let us know whether we should at this stage mention to the State Department our own policy with reference to the 1B list as outlined in your despatch No. 655 of March 7th to the Canadian High Commissioner in London, and whether there is any further information on this subject that we might usefully pass on to the United States authorities.

CONTROL OF STRATEGIC EXPORTS TO COMMUNIST CHINA

1. You informed us that, early in April, the United States and the United Kingdom had asked France, Belgium and the Netherlands to agree to control strategic exports to Communist China.

2. We would also be interested to know whether or not the United Kingdom, in fact, did approach Portugal in regard to controlling exports to China through Macao. (In paragraph 3 of your Teletype WA-3538 of December 31st, 1949, you mentioned that there was a possibility of such an approach being made.)

3. You have asked whether or not you should mention to the United States authorities our own policy with regard to the United States 1B list as outlined in our Despatch No. 655 of March 7th to the Canadian High Commissioner in London. As you know, control over exports of 1A and 1B materials is exercised by our Department of Trade and Commerce which has informed us that, despite our statement that we might not be as strict as the United States in controlling strategic exports to China, in actual practice there is very little or no difference between our attitude and that of the United States regarding such exports. We are, however, not anxious to finally commit ourselves with respect to these items and we believe that we should not make a point of informing the United States that there is any possibility of our policy on 1B exports to China differing from theirs.

4. As a matter of fact, the United States officials will by now have gathered that we are not as firm on this point as they are. The United States delegates to the Paris Co-ordinating Committee on Exports of Strategic Materials requested, on July 7th, that all members immediately control exports of goods on munitions list, List I and List II, to China and North Korea in the same way as they control similar exports to Eastern Europe. We reserved our position on the export to China of goods on the international List II for the reason mainly that merchant ships appear on this list and the process of transferring the Ming Sung ships from Canadian to Communist Chinese registry is still continuing. Copies of relevant telegrams, No. 273 of July 7th† from Paris and No. 258 of July 8th† from Ottawa to Paris are being forwarded to you by air bag.

DESPATCH 572 Paris, July 20, 1950

Sir,

I have the honour to refer to your telegram No. 262 of July 4† and to previous correspondence concerning the United States request that the countries participating in the Paris talks on export control apply the international controls to North Korea and Communist China on the same basis as to Eastern Europe. This question was discussed again at a meeting of the Co-ordinating Committee on July 17.

2. All the participating countries reported that they are now enforcing International Lists I and II and the Munitions List against North Korea. In the case of Communist China, France, Germany, Italy and Norway had previously accepted the applications of these lists, as reported in my telegram No. 279 of July 11†; and the Netherlands did so at the meeting on July 17. Canada's position (as notified in your telegram No. 258 of July 8†) was not considered by the Co-ordinating Committee as constituting a reservation of any importance, and in fact, it was felt that our present policy of scrutinizing International List II exports, with a view to preventing trans-shipment to Korea, carried out the present List II policy of the Group. The United Kingdom made no commitment on International List II, but agreed to enforce International List I and the Munitions List for exports from Hong Kong, Singapore and the United Kingdom itself to Communist China. Denmark has however not yet reached a decision on this subject.

3. The Netherlands delegate while accepting the application of these controls for his country for the present, stated that his government did not consider the Co-ordinating Committee the appropriate organisation through which to enforce restrictions against Korea as the Korean situation fell within the jurisdiction of the United Nations. In addition, he said that the Netherlands did not view the subject of China as a part of either the Korean or the Eastern Europe problems.

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Reference your No. 294 of July 24th.† Export controls to Eastern Europe.

1. Canada has already placed a complete embargo on all shipments to North Korea, and this was announced by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on July 21st.

2. With respect to the control of exports of petroleum products to Communist China, in view of the reports of the United Kingdom that part of the oil supply to North China has gone to North Korea, we are prepared, for the duration of the emergency, to refuse export permits for any oil shipments to Communist China. In order to avoid any impression on the part of Communist China that we regard them as overtly committed on the side of the North Koreans, we do not propose to give any publicity to this decision concerning exports of petroleum to Communist China, and would appreciate this view being put forward in the Co-ordinating Committee.

3. We received from London information concerning the reasons for the United Kingdom decision to interrupt oil supplies to China. We should have been able to give you a reply sooner, had you given us this information in your No. 294 of July 24th.

4. We are also prepared to consent to the embargo on oil shipments to all other Soviet-dominated destinations, with a similar provision that there should be no publicity concerning this embargo.

EXPORT CONTROLS — CONTROL OF OILS

1. At meeting of Co-ordinating Committee on July 28 all participating countries signified their acceptance of the joint United States-United Kingdom proposal for the embargoing to all Soviet-dominated destinations of the following petroleum products (reference our telegram No. 294 of July 24† and our despatch No. 593 of July 26†):

(a) Crude Petroleum

(b) Motor Fuel

(c) Diesel Oil (all grades)

(d) Fuel Oil

(e) Kerosene

(f) Lubricating Oils and Greases.

These items are therefore now on International List I.

2. Your provision that no publicity be given to these measures met with the approval of all the delegates, and the Chairman pointed out that as far as the Co-ordinating Committee was concerned, no publicity would, of course, be given to this decision.

3. With reference to paragraph 3 of your telegram, we regret that we were unable to give you the detailed reasons for the United Kingdom decision to interrupt oil supplies to China, but this information was not made available to the Coordinating Committee. The only reason given to the Committee for this proposal was the recent developments in Korea.

4. We were interested to learn from paragraph 1 of your telegram that Canada had already placed a complete embargo on all shipments to North Korea, as we had not previously been informed of the Minister of Trade and Commerce's announcement of July 21.

5. In conclusion, we should like to emphasize that the Co-ordinating Committee has now accepted the application of International List I and the Munitions List to North Korea and Communist China as well as to Eastern Europe (reference our despatch No. 572 of July 20), Denmark having now accepted this principle. The same principle applies in the case of International List II, except that Canada has made a reservation and the United Kingdom no commitment on the application of List II control to Communist China. In view of this it is now difficult for delegations to propose that items for Communist China be treated differently from items for Eastern Europe. Any item now discussed for embargo (and for quantitative control within the limits of the Canadian and U.K. reservations) is assumed by the Committee to have application to all Soviet-dominated destinations, which at the present is interpreted as U.S.S.R., Eastern Europe, North Korea and Communist China. Since the Committee has unanimously agreed to apply the embargo of International List I to this area as a whole it must always be borne in mind that a decision to add an item to that list automatically cuts off shipments to Communist China.

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], December 9, 1950

TRADE WITH COMMUNIST CHINA

Three days ago the United States introduced a drastic extension of its restrictions on exports to China, including Hong Kong and Macao. The new policy (as I understand it) includes the following points:

(a) No goods of any sort may now be exported through United States ports to China. The goods that flow through United States ports include:

(i) Goods originating in the U.S.;

(ii) Goods originating in Canada (or Mexico) and moving by land to U.S. ports; and

(iii) Goods arriving by sea in U.S. ports en route to China.

You will note that Canadian exports may be affected by (ii) and (iii).

(b) No goods on the United States "positive list" may be shipped in United States vessels to China regardless of the point of origin. The positive list includes both strategic materials and also goods in short supply which have been under export control in the United States. Canada is not directly affected by this provision because our export controls were already pretty closely in line with those in the United States.

2. A major policy question arises: Should Canada follow the United States in banning all exports to China?[16] As you know it has been our policy to keep closely in line with the United States on all matters of export control. Only by doing so have we been able to avoid a cumbersome mass of export controls all along the Canadian-American border. I am told by Mr. Newman of Trade and Commerce that he thinks Mr. Howe will raise this question in Cabinet next week. I suggested to him the desirability of discussions in advance between officials of our two Departments. He readily agreed that this should take place. It would appear desirable to form a view on this matter within our Department before discussions with Trade and Commerce.

3. In the meanwhile Trade and Commerce are having to take immediate action in regard to Canadian exports. This is precipitated by the fact that already at least one Canadian shipment has been held up in a United States port. This runs directly contrary to administrative arrangements built up between the United States and Canada in past years and running back into World War II. We have always maintained that, as long as we were willing to work out with the United States common policies on export controls and to implement these policies in a parallel fashion, the United States officials should honour Canadian export approvals. A sudden change of policy in the United States was no excuse for failure to honour these approvals. The proper procedure was for the United States to discuss policy changes in advance with the Canadian authorities.[17] Hence the Department of Trade and Commerce is vigorously protesting the holdup of the particular Canadian shipment to China.[18]

4. However, it is expected to take a week or two at least before Trade and Commerce can iron out these administrative difficulties. Meanwhile Canadian policy regarding exports to China must be reviewed and the situation brought under complete control. Up to the present China has been under "area control" by the Department of Trade and Commerce. This means that all goods to that destination require export permits but a wide range of ordinary civilian goods has been moving not on special licences but on an open general licence. Trade and Commerce are planning to revoke immediately this general licence so that all goods will have to move to China on specific licences. In addition they are planning to instruct the holders of all outstanding specific licenses to submit them for re-validation in Ottawa.[19]

A.F.W. P[LUMPTRE]

P.S. Since I spoke to you about this I have confirmed that our export controls do give us power (in almost all cases) to prevent re-export to China of any goods shipped into Canada from U.S.A.[20]

Dear Mr. Mackenzie:

EXPORTS TO CHINA

Last week your Department recalled all outstanding export permits to China and changed your regulations so that in future all exports to that country would require individual permits and none would move on general licence. This administrative change has been reported in the press as a change of Canadian policy; it is suggested that we followed the United States in placing an embargo on all exports to China.

2. I was very glad to learn today that no change of policy was intended. Indeed, as I understand it, your administrative changes are designed to ensure that legitimate Canadian exporters to China do not run into difficulties such as they would now experience if they tried to send their goods through American ports.

3. My Minister would be opposed to a complete embargo for political reasons. Such a step would constitute a measure of deliberate economic pressure which in our opinion would tend to aggravate the present very delicate situation. As you know, our views on these matters are fully shared by United Kingdom authorities although they are not fully shared by the United States authorities.

4. You will agree that before any change of this drastic character is undertaken by Canada it would require the most careful consideration by Cabinet.

Yours sincerely,

CONFIDENTIAL [Ottawa], December 18, 1950

U.S. RESTRICTIONS ON EXPORTS TO CHINA AND CHINESE ASSETS IN U.S.A.

Mr. Willoughby of the United States Embassy came to see me today. He wished to explain that the Unites States action in restricting the movement of goods to China (including Hong Kong and Macao) and in restricting the use of Chinese assets in the United States was not to be interpreted as all-out economic warfare against China by the United States. The Government of the United States was still hopeful that, through United Nations machinery, a settlement of the Korean issue would be reached. On the other hand the United States Government could not ignore the fact that military action was in fact taking place in Korea. Under the circumstances it became necessary to try to ensure that the military action by the Chinese was not supported from outside. The fact that men were dying in the United Nations forces made it essential as far as possible to cut off supplies to those who were fighting on the other side.

2. Mr. Willoughby repeated that the United States Government was not waging all-out economic warfare and said that they would be glad to be told of ways in which their actions in the economic field were causing disturbance to interests in friendly countries. I undertook to bring this point to the attention of the agencies of government to which Canadian interests might bring the complaints. I am sending copies of this memorandum to the Departments of Finance and Trade and Commerce, the Secretary of State's Department, the Bank of Canada, the Secretary to the Cabinet, the Foreign Exchange Control Board, the Canadian Maritime Commission and the Air Transport Board.

3. I asked Willoughby what he considered to be the difference between the present action of the United States and full-scale economic warfare, apart from the fact that the United States Navy was not stopping the ships of other nations on the high seas. He replied, first, that there were various measures of economic warfare that were not used at present such as blacklisting, preclusive buying, etc. Second, he suggested that the United States controls, both over exports to China and also over Chinese assets, might not in fact be administered as a complete embargo. He envisaged the possibility that a certain amount of non-essential goods might be allowed to move. He added however, when I questioned him, that this was his own interpretation of the message received by his Embassy from State Department. I hazarded the guess that the administration of the new restrictions was not yet fully settled in Washington and he agreed.

4. I asked him how widely the freeze on Chinese assets in the United States was likely to extend. He said he had no immediate knowledge but he expected that it would extend very widely, following the pattern of the last war, when such restrictions extended to all assets which were either fully or partially under the control of a resident or national of an enemy country.

5. Mr. Willoughby's understanding of the present regulations regarding United States exports to China was rather different from my own and I have asked him to supply a statement for our use.

TRADE WITH CHINA AND NORTH KOREA

1. George Willis, Director, Office of International Finance, Treasury Department, together with Arnold of the Treasury Legal Staff, initiated a general discussion today about Canadian trade policy with Hong Kong, China and North Korea, and the possibility of exports from these areas reaching the United States via Canada.

2. It was explained that the fundamental purpose of the recent Treasury Department freezing order is to prevent the acquisition by China of valuable foreign exchange and that the hope is held that other western countries will follow policies that will produce the same result. The Treasury Department interest is chiefly related to preventing United States imports from the areas in question.

3. A case was mentioned as an example of the public relations difficulties that have followed in the wake of the United States freezing action. The complainant was a United States west coast importer who had, in the past, imported peanuts from China destined for Canadian consumption. He had pointed out that he was precluded from continuing this trade, but his Canadian competitors were free to set up Swiss francs for payment to Chinese exporters for transactions of this nature. This case was not questioned, but it was pointed out that Canadian policy concerning trade with these areas did not parallel United States policy with respect to foodstuffs and that this was probably the most marginal type of case that could arise.

4. Some discussion was devoted to the likelihood or possibility that Canada could become a transit point for China to United States shipments, and Willis stated that the only United States import test that would be applied would be that of the country of origin. If the goods originated from China they would be denied admittance to the United States, the only exception being shipments of highly strategic materials which would be permitted entry if they could be obtained. It was stated that Canadian traders should be put on notice that goods from China would not be admitted into the United States. In turn the question was asked whether it would not be advisable to put United States traders on notice that these goods would not be admitted to the United States and that transhipments through any third or more countries would not change this fundamental policy. Willis agreed to pursue the United States aspect of this question with a view to issuing a Treasury Department press release. It is suggested that similar consideration be given to this question in Ottawa. If a Treasury Department press release is forthcoming it might make a good background document for Canadian action.

5. An additional question raised by Willis was whether or not there were any Canadian controls that would forestall imports into Canada for purpose of re-export to the United States. Willis was told that it was thought that Canadian policy would be sympathetic to the United States position, but it was not known that there was any screening process in action which would deny the entry of such goods into Canada. He asked for confirmation of this position, so that it would be appreciated if an explanation of Canadian procedures, if any, could be forwarded for discussion with the Treasury Department.

Repeat Permdel No. 22.
Your WA-3414 of December 29, 1950 — Trade with China and North Korea.

1. Nobody can fail to recognize the part played by U.S. forces in Korea and the feeling, so widespread in U.S.A., that aggression by Chinese Communist regime should be fought by all practicable means calculated to produce useful results.

2. It is not so clear that an embargo on all trade, both imports and exports, will in fact produce useful results. Restrictions on export of strategic materials to China are one thing; we are willing to go along with U.S. on this matter and give a very wide interpretation to the term "strategic". A general trade embargo is quite another thing and might hurt us at least as much as the Chinese. It would also tend to precipitate any plans they may have to overrun neighbouring territories of economic as well political value. It would increase their dependence on the U.S.S.R.

3. Whatever the arguments may be for a complete embargo as part of economic sanctions against China under U.N. auspices, a partial and ineffective embargo is merely irritating and provocative. It would have seemed desirable for U.S. to explore fully the question of U.N. action before embarking on unilateral sanctions.

4. Are you sure that it is in fact the policy of the U.S. Government to prohibit imports from China? There was no suggestion of this either when Willoughby called on this Department on December 18th to explore the effects of the freeze of Chinese assets in U.S.A. or in his confirmatory letter to Plumptre dated December 20th (see material sent to you under despatches E-4128 of December 18th and E-4206 of December 23rd).[21] Further, we do not know of the existence of U.S. machinery to implement an import embargo against China. (We realize that they are using Order M63 to restrict imports of certain agricultural products from all sources.) We are always anxious to cooperate with U.S. but we would want a clearer statement of U.S. Government policy, and of the means of implementing it, before we could consider issuing the proposed warning to Canadian traders not to accept goods from China destined for U.S.A.

5. In regard to the question of controlling shipments through Canada into the U.S., we appear to have no legal authority for import controls in the present circumstances. (See Section 4 of Export and Import Permits Act). The only possibility would appear to be the extension of our export controls to restrict shipments from Canada to U.S. As in many other cases discussed with the Department of Commerce in the past, we would prefer to use this Canadian machinery as an alternative to the imposition by the U.S. of imports controls against Canada. However, before we can consider such measures we would need clarification of the U.S. position as requested in the previous paragraph.

approval has been given to Canadian participation. I should like to take this opportunity to make some observations on the Canadian attitude to the Japanese Peace Treaty for the guidance of yourself and Mr. Collins at the meetings.

2. Mr. Collins has been associated with the work of the Far Eastern Commission ever since it was established. In addition, he attended the Canberra Conference on the Japanese Peace Treaty in August of 1947. He has had an opportunity to discuss the subject recently with departmental officers in Ottawa and will be provided with documentation for use in the detailed discussions which are to take place.

3. Our understanding of the purpose of these meetings is that they should provide an opportunity for a free exchange of views at the official level in order to determine the area of agreement which may exist at this level on the major issues involved in the achievement of a Japanese peace settlement. We did not consider ourselves in a position at this stage to place before Cabinet for approval specific recommendations regarding the attitude Canada should adopt toward the Japanese peace settlement, since we do not know as yet the firm views of other interested governments, especially those of the United States. We think it necessary to have a clear indication of the United States stand before final consideration is given to any of the important issues. We would hope that the United States would avoid setting out hard and fast requirements which leave no room for discussion. It is equally important that the Working Party should not reach conclusions so firm that they could not later be modified in the light of the United States proposals. We would regard the formulation of recommendations to governments by the Working Party as inconsistent with the principles discussed above.

4. It is most important that the other Commonwealth representatives should understand our attitude and I trust you will take an early opportunity to indicate our position. You will appreciate that the Canadian attitude towards the main issues of the peace settlement must take into account the views of the United States Government. There are important gaps in our knowledge of these views. It is for this reason that no commitments on policy can be made at London. The primary role played by the United States in the Occupation of Japan and the responsibility which the United States will bear in any final settlement — two facts generally recognized by all the Commonwealth governments — make it only reasonable that we should delay reaching any final decision on the issues involved in a Japanese Peace Treaty until we have had an opportunity to give full consideration to the overall desires of the United States concerning Japan and the peace settlement.

5. The other Commonwealth delegations will no doubt, in varying degrees, wish to avoid creating the impression that a Commonwealth panel is being formed at London. We would regard it as most unfortunate if the impression were given that there was a "Commonwealth view". It should be clearly understood that no Commonwealth government can speak for any other government or group of governments. If the procedural basis for a Japanese peace conference is to be that suggested in the United States proposal of July 1947, that is a two-thirds majority vote on matters of substance, the effect would be to give the Commonwealth governments the power of veto in the conference. It would be most undesirable for Commonwealth governments to prejudice their relations with the United States by allowing the impression to become current that they were planning to take advantage of their potential veto in the conference.

6. In relations with the press it should be emphasized that the meetings are only for a confidential exchange of views and that no policy commitments will result from them. It is equally important that the press should not get the impression that a corporate Commonwealth view is being formed. You might ask the Information Officer on your staff to watch the press coverage being given the meetings. If it becomes apparent that a wrong impression is being gained by the press, you should take whatever steps you consider necessary to correct that impression. I think it would be useful if the purpose of these meetings were made clear in a communiqué issued after the opening sessions.

7. Our experience as a result of the Colombo Conference would lead us to suggest that periodic telegrams should be sent to the Department reporting on significant points raised in the discussions.

8. Subject to the limitations noted in the foregoing paragraphs, it has been possible in the light of our participation in other conferences in which the Japanese Peace Treaty has been discussed, to indicate in our drafting of the documentation which Mr. Collins will take to London, the main principles of our tentative policies on some of the more important issues. These have been summarized below:

(a) Procedure—We would give continued support to the United States proposal of July 11, 1947, that all member nations of the Far Eastern Commission should participate in drafting of a Peace Treaty with decisions to be taken by a two-thirds majority vote and with no veto involved. Canada would welcome the participation of the U.S.S.R. and China but believes consideration might be given to going ahead without them if they demand the veto power as a basis for participation. Canada would welcome discussion of the views of other governments as to how permanent a settlement with Japan can be achieved without the participation of these two interested powers. I indicated at Colombo our support for any request made by Ceylon for a seat at the Japanese Peace Conference. There is no doubt that we would also support any claim put forward by Indonesia. We would think membership in the Far Eastern Commission should be sought by these two countries as a preliminary step in the achievement of their aims. Ceylon might be encouraged during the meetings in London to request membership in that organization.

(b) Security Aims—Canada's interests are:

(1) To prevent the re-emergence of an aggressive Japan, either alone or in alliance with other hostile powers.

(2) To ensure the external and domestic security of Japan,

(a) in order to deny Japan's trained manpower and industrial resources to Communist control, and

(b) in order to permit the growth of democratic ideas.

(3) To gain the voluntary cooperation of Japan with the Western allies in the problems of peace as well as in the event of war.

Canada recognizes the prime responsibility of the United States in this regard and believes it would be inadvisable to press the United States Government to take any action which it might regard as imprudent.

(c) Economic Provisions—Provided that our basic security aims are met, we would think it unwise to impose restrictive economic clauses in the peace treaty. Our aim is to allow Japan to achieve a viable economy. This would assist in relieving the depressed economic conditions in the Pacific and Southeast Asian areas. Any improvements which can be made in the economic health of the area would make Communist penetration more difficult. This general approach should not blind us to the commercial malpractices of the Japanese in the past and consideration should be given to methods by which Japan could be brought to adhere to the generally accepted standards of commercial behaviour. The early restoration of normal trading relations between Japan and the rest of the world is desirable, consistent with our security requirements.

(d) Territorial Provisions—It would be difficult to challenge the territorial transfers agreed upon in the Cairo Declaration, the Yalta Agreement and the Potsdam Declaration, although Japan must surrender its rights in these territories in the Peace Treaty. The United States Trusteeship presently exercised in the former Japanese Mandated Islands might possibly be extended to cover the Ryukyu and Bonin Islands, the Volcano Islands and Marcus Island. Tsushima and Goto Islands, because of their close historical and administrative ties with Japan, might safely be returned to Japanese control. Difficulties, however, may arise in specifying the return of sovereignty in such cases as Korea, Formosa and the Kwantung Leased Territory. Provision will also have to be made for Japanese renunciation of any rights in the Japanese Mandated Islands presently under United States Trusteeship. We would welcome discussion on the importance of possible Russian concessions to Japan in the territorial field.

(e) Political and General Provisions—Japan should be called on to guarantee protection of the fundamental human rights and freedoms. Consideration should be given to measures which might be taken to ensure that the Japanese would recognize the obligation to grant the minimum civilized standards of treatment to aliens in Japan. Possibly the Treaty should bind her, for a specified period, to carry out the important directives and reforms introduced by the Occupation, e.g. land reform, sentences of war criminals, dissolution of nationalistic and militaristic societies, purge of undesirable individuals from public life, dissolution of Zaibatsu, etc.

(f) Enforcement of Treaty Provisions—It is difficult to envisage any machinery which could be effective without being unwieldy. In addition, if China and Russia were to sign the Peace Treaty they would probably be eligible for a seat on any control body which was set up in the Treaty. It would be undesirable in our view to give them such an opportunity to interfere in Japanese affairs. In the light of our non-participation in the Occupation to date it is debatable whether we would be prepared to make the military and financial commitments which might be called for in any elaborate machinery proposed. It would be useful, however, to consider the possible use in Japan's case of our export control regulations. This might be done in conjunction with other interested countries on the model of similar action taken with regard to Eastern Europe.

(g) Reparations and War Claims—It is apparent that for all practical purposes reparations from Japan's internal industrial assets are a dead issue. A recommendation is before Cabinet for the liquidation of Japanese assets in Canada. A Royal Commission on War Claims has been suggested in the memorandum to Cabinet. If the method of settlement involving a general pooling of enemy assets with settlement to Canadians from that pool no matter where loss abroad was suffered is accepted then Japanese external assets (e.g. in Switzerland and Thailand) would be of interest to us for inclusion in the general pool. Care should be taken that no provision in the treaty would preclude this method of settlement. Our experience with the Inter-Allied Reparations Agency and its distribution of German assets has been satisfactory and some similar arrangements for the disposition of Japanese external assets would seem reasonable.

(h) Fishing—The protection of our West Coast fishing interests is of primary concern. An United States suggestion concerning the negotiation of an immediate treaty with the Japanese whereby they would agree not to fish within 150 miles of United States or Canadian territory has been examined recently. It is possible that the United States may retract this proposal, since it is at variance with the public stand taken by the United States in the Potsdam Declaration with regard to the granting of freedom of access to the raw materials of the world to Japan and other countries. The Peace Treaty might contain provisions binding Japan to observe all international agreements on the conservation of fish and sea mammals and possibly national conservation regulations governing fishing in littoral waters. In this manner it may be possible to curb the pre-war practices of her fishermen which, if continued, would lead to the serious depletion of the salmon and halibut resources of the North Pacific.

9. As one of the main purposes of the meeting is an exchange of ideas, we will be looking forward to receiving a full report on the views expressed in London. In addition to covering the meeting itself, it will be appreciated if the report contains recommendations for changes and revisions in the departmental documentation in case it proves possible to use it as the basis for drafting instructions for the Canadian delegation at a general peace conference for Japan.

10. I trust that you will find the meeting both interesting and valuable from your point of view and from that of the Canadian Government.

Yours sincerely,

L.B. PEARSON

DESPATCH 1138 London, May 19, 1950

SECRET

Sir,

I have the honour to enclose for your information eight copies of the Report of the Commonwealth Working Party on the Japanese Peace Treaty,† which met in London from May 1st to May 17th. The Report is an able summary of the discussions, and I shall attempt to do little more in this despatch than add a few comments on what appeared to be the general positions of some of the other delegations.

2. As indicated in my telegram No. 836 of May 2nd,† the discussions got off to a dubious start at the opening meeting of High Commissioners under the chairmanship of the Secretary of State for Commonwealth Relations. The difficulty, which was largely procedural, arose from the interpretation attached by the High Commissioners of India and Ceylon to the Colombo decision that "detailed consideration of the terms of a peace treaty with Japan should be undertaken by a working party of officials under the direction of Commonwealth High Commissioners in London". Personalities accounted for much of the problem, which was eventually resolved by means of an agreement to look upon the Working Party proper as consisting of the High Commissioners and their officials. The discussions were therefore conducted on the basis of periodic plenary meetings designed to furnish the guidance provided for in the Colombo resolution, detailed consideration of the agenda being left to meetings of the official group.

3. The procedural difficulty also created an initial problem in connection with the agenda. As proposed by the United Kingdom, the agenda for the discussions among officials was to have been as follows:

(1) Consideration of the problem of Japan in its broadest aspects against the background of the world situation.

(2) Detailed aspects of the settlement as follows:

(a) Procedure
(b) Basic aims with particular reference to security
(c) Economic provisions
(d) Territorial provisions
(e) Political and general provisions
(f) The problem of enforcing the provisions of the treaty

4. Owing to the position adopted by India and Ceylon, however, it was felt that the officials could not proceed profitably until the High Commissioners had considered Item I, and this was dealt with at the second plenary session. The net result, as you will see from the Report, was to add another item to the agenda, arising out of the discussion of the broader aspects of the problem, which appears under the heading "Peace Treaty and the Alternatives".

5. It was made clear at the outset that the meetings were purely exploratory in nature and without commitment by Governments, and this was emphasized in the single communiqué issued after the opening session. Actually, there was very little interest displayed by the press, and apart from articles in the Sunday Times and Manchester Guardian immediately before the meetings began nothing has, to our knowledge, appeared in the British papers on the subject. It was therefore decided at the concluding plenary meeting to let sleeping dogs lie, and that no final communiqué was required.

6. Some slight difficulty might have arisen over the form and nature of the Report resulting from the discussions, especially in view of Mr. Walker's original suggestion that an attempt might be made during the course of the conference to resolve points of difference by reference back to Governments. This suggestion was dropped, however, and the Report, as a summary of the exchange of views, follows as closely as we could expect the form which we desired.

7. The discussions themselves have, I think, been very useful in several respects. They have indicated that what perhaps appeared at Colombo to be almost irreconcilable divergences of basic approach may not, in practical application, be too far apart to permit of resolution. At the same time the analysis of the various problems involved in the achievement of a settlement has helped to bring the facts of life into sharper focus and may well result in appropriate adjustment of official thinking. Finally, the discussions have raised a number of issues and produced new suggestions which merit further study by all concerned.

8. Mr. [Maberly E.] Dening, Assistant Under-Secretary in charge of Far Eastern affairs, was chairman of the official meetings, and the United Kingdom memorandum on the Japanese peace settlement which had been prepared for the Foreign Ministers Conference at Colombo served as the basis for the discussions. The Foreign Office was therefore in a position to exert a good deal of influence on the way the talks developed. It think it safe to say that the main purpose of the meetings, from the United Kingdom point of view, was to produce maximum agreement on an approach to the problem which would reassure the United States and strengthen the hand of those elements in the United States Government that wish to see a treaty concluded with Japan. As Mr. Dening put it at one point, one object of the exercise was to provide the State Department with ammunition to use against the Pentagon.

9. This approach left the impression at times that the chief United Kingdom objective was purely and simply an early treaty with Japan, and that in the last analysis the United Kingdom would probably be willing to accept almost any kind of settlement so long as a settlement were in fact achieved. With the general line adopted by the British in their analysis we should certainly not be disposed to disagree, but it was interesting to note the tactics employed by Mr. Dening in his handling of the meetings, especially the eagerness with which any new arguments in favour of an early settlement were seized. Great stress was laid on the dangers of possible Sino-Soviet initiative in the calling of a conference, and the Australian proposal that the granting of M.F.N. treatment for Japan might be avoided through a special provision in the treaty to the effect that "the terms and conditions of trade between Japan and the signatory powers may be determined by bilateral agreements" was cited on several occasions as an example of the sort of solution of outstanding problems that can only be attained through treaty procedure. Since this particular proposal has little or no chance of acceptance by the United States in any event, the argument at that point seemed slightly thin.

10. Similarly, when the officials embarked on their analysis of the alternatives to a treaty of peace (i.e. continuation of the status quo or an intermediate solution perhaps involving declarations of termination of the state of war) and the implications of proceeding without China and the U.S.S.R., there was an obvious reluctance on the part of the chairman to do more than marshall the arguments against any alternative and against any suggestions that a separate peace might have dangerous consequences.

11. Another interesting development was the insistence, during the meeting on territorial provisions, on the point that only the participants at the Cairo and Yalta Conferences are bound by the agreements entered into on those occasions. This is not covered in the Report, which merely notes that the disposition of the territories to be ceded by Japan need not be dealt with in the peace treaty itself (paragraph 40(b)). It would appear that Mr. Dening, who had been carrying on parallel discussions with United States officials in connection with the bi-partite meetings, had been impressed with the significance of the United States' strategic interest in denying Formosa to a Communist China, as distinct from the United States' political interest in honouring its agreements and respecting China's territorial integrity. Anything that would allay United States fears regarding the relationship between a peace treaty and the fate of Formosa would therefore be all to the good, and the seed was probably planted with this in mind.

12. To summarize, it might be said that the objective of the United Kingdom is to resume normal relations with Japan, as free as possible from the most favoured nation treatment now enjoyed by the United States (and, in a sense, by Japan herself) through the existence of S.C.A.P., without too much consideration for the security problem involved. This is assumed to be a responsibility which the United States will have to shoulder in any case, and which for all practical purposes need not be taken into account. Allowing for journalistic and gallic cynicism, the estimate of Le Monde's Far Eastern correspondent (which appeared in the Manchester Guardian just as the Working Party was beginning its more serious deliberations) may not be far wrong:

"Only London seems to know what it wants: a treaty without the Russians and Chinese, followed by a peace as far as possible without — the Americans. To reattach Japan to the sterling group and to have a free hand in Tokyo: such, simplifying a little, is the British objective, unattainable till MacArthur has gone. Having bided its time with an altogether Asiatic patience, Britain hopes to reappear shortly on the scene in merchant's garb".

13. Although personalities tended to dramatize the positions taken by India and Ceylon, the real maverick at the round-up turned out to be New Zealand. The Australian High Commissioner led off by making the expected statement on behalf of security in the South Pacific, but in the official discussions it became evident that the Australians were hedging and that they were willing to be persuaded that their preoccupation with fears of revived Japanese aggression might be moderated if the United States were to assume responsibility and some system of long range (i.e. export) controls could be worked out as a substitute for control machinery in Japan. New Zealand, on the other hand, really wants security and is not too impressed by arguments involving the Cold War and the desirability of giving Japan incentives to throw in her lot with the democratic world. Of all those represented at the meetings, New Zealand had shifted least from the Canberra formulae and was the only country that maintained with any conviction the desirability of some post-treaty control machinery in Japan. Essentially the New Zealand position is that, isolated in the Pacific, her primary concern must be her own security. If that security were underwritten by the United States, the question of Japan might be approached with the objectivity the world situation seems to require. In the absence of any undertaking or guarantee, the advantage of a peace treaty without minimum security controls is open to doubt. The official position of New Zealand on the Working Party was therefore that while an early treaty might be desirable in the abstract, in reality its value would depend on the nature of its security provisions. By implication this could be taken, I assume, to mean that if the security of New Zealand were convincingly assured through measures outside the treaty itself, such as a regional defence agreement, then the attitude toward the treaty would change. Pending such assurance the New Zealand representative was inclined to be somewhat sceptical of the whole proposition, and to wonder whether the Occupation may not be rather useful after all. This, of course, was tantamount to heresy from the United Kingdom point of view.

14. India and Ceylon (together with Pakistan) in a formal sense represented the opposition to the approach of Australia and New Zealand. Where the latter stressed security, they stressed the psychological factors and the importance of not losing the peace through causing resentment and frustration in Japan. In fact, however, India and Ceylon approached the problem from quite different basic assumptions. Ceylon was the most extreme exponent of the thesis that the immediate danger is the threat of Communist imperialism. This led to the conclusion that almost anything which would help ensure the non-communist orientation of Japan was worth the risk, and that we should take the chance of building up Japan as a bulwark on our side. This was combined with a very jaundiced evaluation of United States policies in Japan.

15. India, on the other hand, tended to avoid the menace of communism (or of the U.S.S.R.). The Indian representative stated at one point in the discussion that there really was no basic difference between the Indian approach and that of Australia and New Zealand. All were interested in the question of security against Japan. The only difference lay in their respective appreciations of how this could best be achieved. India believes that it is a surer guarantee if emphasis is placed on the positive and human elements rather than on restrictions, in order to gain the voluntary co-operation of the Japanese. Actually, the real Indian position was left somewhat in doubt, insofar as the practical aspects of a peace treaty were concerned. One of the key questions was of course that of the anticipated requirement of the United States for bases in Japan. None of the Commonwealth countries except India indicated any objection to the retention of such bases. At the second meeting of the High Commissioners, Mr. Krishna Menon stated quite categorically that his Government could not agree to a treaty which would permit any power to maintain bases in Japan. When questioned as to the meaning of this statement with regard to the conclusion of a bilateral defence agreement outside the treaty, Mr. Menon avoided a direct reply, and this was taken to mean that the Indian objection applied only to a specific provision in the treaty proper. The draft report therefore contained a sentence to the effect that "this (the Indian objection) would not, however, necessarily apply to an arrangement voluntarily entered into by a fully sovereign Japan after the conclusion of a peace treaty". At the request of the Indian representative this interpretation was deleted, and there was no further clarification of the Indian position.

16. Unfortunately, the Indian view that "some broad multilateral framework of security would provide the most desirable solution" was likewise never made explicit, and although the impression was given that India favoured a general guarantee of Japanese territorial integrity, including China and the U.S.S.R., it was never clear how far it was intended to carry this approach.

17. The general area of agreement which emerged from the meetings was fairly substantial. The United Kingdom proposition that "developments since the end of the war with Japan point towards the conclusion of a peace treaty which will not result in the permanent resentment of the Japanese people, and which, in consequence will offer real prospects that Japan's own efforts will enable her to reach a reasonable standard of living" was accepted as a major premise, and it was agreed that, in addition to the basic aims of the Canberra period it should now be recognized as equally important to ensure that

(a) Japan's industrial capacity and skilled man-power are denied to the Soviet Union

(b) Japan is enabled to enjoy the conditions necessary for the establishment of a viable economy.

18. All delegations, with the possible exception of India, were prepared to have the United States maintain post-treaty bases in Japan, and the United Kingdom in particular adopted the view that this was the only practical solution of the problem of security for Japan. Moreover, whatever the general Indian attitude may be, it is doubtful that it would be carried to the length of actively opposing a bilateral defence agreement between the United States and Japan. All delegations likewise recognized the necessity of maintaining Japan's internal security through the strengthening of the police force and coast guard service.

19. It also became fairly clear during the course of the exchanges of views that, in any realistic appraisal, reparations from Japanese internal industrial assets, internal security controls, and limits on non-military industrial production (with the exception of the aircraft industry) are now dead issues.

20. Annex B of the enclosed Report lists the following items as subjects which might be given further study and on which views might be exchanged at a later date through normal channels:

(i) The disposition of the Far Eastern Commission and the Allied Council in the event of a conclusion of a Treaty of Peace without the participation of the Soviet Union and China.

(ii) The extent to which individual Commonwealth countries might be prepared to make specific contributions towards the defence of Japan.

(iii) The nature and effectiveness of long range economic controls designed to prevent the resurgence of Japanese military power, including the possibility of collateral agreements between interested Governments on appropriate economic matters.

(iv) The possibility of negotiating a Far Eastern fisheries convention.

(v) The possible inclusion in the Treaty of Peace of a clause on the lines of that discussed in paragraph 32. (Australian proposal in connection with M.F.N. treatment for Japan).

(vi) The possible inclusion in the Treaty of Peace of a clause on the lines of that discussed in paragraph 44. (Canadian draft of a possible human rights clause designed to cover the treatment of aliens in Japan).

21. In addition to the above, further consideration might be given to the New Zealand suggestions (paragraphs 45 and 49 of the Report) concerning the machinery for dealing with breaches of the Human Rights clauses and the possibility of dividing the treaty into two parts, the second part to include those provisions which in practice could be made effective only through the good will of the Japanese and which might take the form of a declaration of intention on the part of Japan. Paragraphs 47 (b) and 47 (c) of the Report deal with the desirability of a reference to responsibility for provoking the war and with the question of sponsoring Japan for membership in the United Nations. Neither of these subjects are treated in the present Canadian brief, and it might be useful to include some reference to them in any future documentation.

22. The possibility of using export control procedures as a device for solving, in part at least, the problem of ensuring against renewed Japanese aggression turned out to be one of the more important subjects dealt with in the discussions. If a plausible case could be made out for the effectiveness of such long range controls, they would help provide Australia in particular and possibly New Zealand with a way out of the security-minded position to which they have been committed. If this device is to be taken at all seriously, consideration will have to be given to the question of what kind of international agreement outside the treaty might be required to put it into effect. It was with this in mind that the Australian delegation added to the relevant item in the above list of subjects for further study, the phrase "including the possibility of collateral agreements between interested Governments on appropriate economic matters".

23. Almost all of the points mentioned in your letter of instructions of April 22nd are, I believe, covered in the Report. The general Canadian position on a settlement with Japan as well as on the Working Party's functions was presented in my statement at the opening meeting, which followed the lines of the draft contained in your telegram No. 590 of April 28th.†

24. At the final meeting of High Commissioners on May 17th it was agreed that we should invite our respective Governments to consider whether the Report should be shown to the Government of the United States, and if so, what changes would be required. I should be grateful if you could let me have your instructions on this point, as well as on the question of how it might be communicated, assuming that agreement is reached regarding a suitable text.

I have, etc.

FAR EAST: JAPANESE PEACE TREATY

(2) United States Initiative. President Truman in his press conference on September 14[22] stated that the United States Government believed that another effort should be made to conclude a Japanese Peace Treaty and that he had authorized the Department of State to initiate informal discussions with Governments on the Far Eastern Commission. Mr. Dulles informed Mr. Wrong privately that it was planned that State Department officials should undertake bilateral talks in New York during the General Assembly with representatives of friendly Governments on the Far Eastern Commission, which in turn would lead to general agreement among the Governments concerned as to the next stage of procedure.

Mr. Dulles called a special conference on September 15, at which he briefed United States correspondents on the substance of the proposals which will be presented by the United States in the forthcoming discussions. His action in deliberately calling a press conference to disclose the main line of United States policy before the announced discussions with other Governments had begun, had caused some consternation. This public statement of aims can only make subsequent discussions more difficult.

JAPANESE PEACE TREATY

1. My teletype WA-2282 contains the texts of two memoranda in connection with the United States position on the Japanese Peace Treaty, which were given to Mr. Spender by Mr. Dulles in New York on Friday. We understand that Mr. Dulles also discussed this question with the British on Friday, and is intending to approach the Indians tomorrow.

2. As these memoranda were given to us on a personal basis, it would be appreciated if care were taken not to mention either to the Americans or to the Australians that we have obtained them here.

3. In presenting these memoranda, Mr. Dulles emphasized the desirability of avoiding the mistakes of Versailles and of doing what we can to ensure that the Japanese are persuaded that it is in their interests to choose the side of the democracies in the present division of world forces. We understand that Mr. Spender commented only on the security aspects of the United Nations proposals, pointing out that in view of Australian public opinion it would be difficult for the Australian Government to accept a treaty which provided for the security of Japan but which omits any provision whatever dealing with the security of other countries against possible future Japanese aggression.

4. You will note that neither memorandum deals specifically with the difficult procedural problems which will have to be faced in connection with any treaty with Japan, such as whether or not there should be a formal conference, and what should be done about Chinese participation. We understand that this aspect of the problem was not mentioned by Mr. Dulles or raised by Mr. Spender.

5. You will also note that item (4) in the second memorandum, dealing with security, seems to imply that the United States intend to make a reference to the post-treaty security arrangements for Japan in the treaty itself, rather than leave this to be handled entirely under a separate agreement.

6. As you no doubt have been informed by London, the agreed text of the Commonwealth Working Party report on the Japanese Peace Treaty was shown to United States officials by the British last week.

TELEGRAM WA-2282 Washington, September 25, 1950

SECRET

Repeat Permdel No. 241.
Reference my teletype, WA-2277, New York No. 240. Japanese Peace Treaty.
Following are the texts of the two United States memoranda on this question.

1. "There is attached a brief general statement of the type of treaty envisioned by the United States Government as proper to end the state of war with Japan. It is stressed that this statement is only suggestive and tentative and does not commit the United States Government to the detailed content or wording of any future draft. It is expected that after there has been an opportunity to study this outline there will be a series of informal discussions designed to elaborate on it and make clear any points which may be obscure at first glance."

(Text of attached statement):

2. "The United States proposes a treaty with Japan which would end the state of war, restore Japanese sovereignty and bring Japan back as an equal in the society of free people. As regards specific matters, the treaty would reflect the principles indicated below:

(1) Parties. Any or all nations at war with Japan which are willing to make peace on the basis proposed and as may be agreed.

(2) United Nations. Membership by Japan would be contemplated.

(3) Territory. Japan would (a) recognize the independence of Korea; (b) agree to United Nations trusteeship, with the United States as administering authority, of the Ryukyu and Bonin Islands and (c) accept the future decision of the United Kingdom, U.S.S.R., China and United States with reference to status of Formosa, Pescadores, South Sakhalin and the Kuriles. In the event of no decision within a year after the treaty came into effect the United Nations General Assembly would decide. Special rights and interests in China would be renounced.

(4) Security. The treaty would contemplate that, pending satisfactory alternative security arrangements such as United Nations assumption of effective responsibility, there would be continuing cooperative responsibility between Japanese facilities and United States and perhaps other forces for the maintenance of international peace and security in the Japan area.

(5) Political and Commercial Arrangements. Japan would agree to adhere to multilateral treaties dealing with narcotics and fishing. Prewar bilateral treaties could be revived by mutual agreement. Pending the conclusion of new commercial treaties, Japan would extend most-favoured-nation treatment, subject to normal exceptions.

(6) Claims. All parties would waive claims arising out of War Act prior to September 2nd, 1945, except that (a) the Allied Powers would, in general, hold Japanese property within their territory and (b) Japan would restore Allied property or, if not restorable intact, provide yen to compensate for an agreed percentage of lost value.

(7) Disputes. Claims disputes would be settled by a special neutral tribunal to be set up by the President of the International Court of Justice. Other disputes would be referred either to diplomatic settlement, or to the International Court of Justice."

JAPANESE PEACE TREATY

It is expected that Mr. Dulles will seek an interview with Mr. Pearson in the near future in order to present the U.S. memorandum sent to you as Washington's No. 241 of September 25. This memorandum was given to our Embassy in Washington on a personal basis and care should be taken not to indicate to the Americans that we have seen it in advance of their presentation of it. The memorandum does little more than sketch in general outline the U.S. approach to the Peace Treaty. It is the opinion of our Embassy in Washington that, although the Americans will not wish to discuss details until a later stage, it is open to us to raise any questions which may occur to us at this stage. The following are general questions which occur to Department officials which Mr. Pearson might wish to ask Mr. Dulles when they meet. The material is set out under the headings used in the U.S. memorandum and this telegram should be read in conjunction with Washington's No. 241 of September 25, to you. Under certain of the headings no questions are posed, but comments are included for Mr. Pearson's use.

(1) Parties. Under the heading the problem of procedure might be discussed. The following questions are pertinent:

(a) Does the United States hope to obtain, in writing, the preliminary comments of the FEC governments on the points made in their memorandum? If so, is it contemplated that such comments will be circulated to all the governments concerned?

If this is to be the method employed by the United States, the next stage presumably would be the circulation of a memorandum embodying the preliminary comments of all the governments approached.

(b) At what stage do United States officials think it likely that representatives of FEC governments would meet for informal discussions?

(c) What attitude is the United States likely to take towards the problem of Nationalist and Communist Chinese participation in both the preliminary and later stages of the discussions?

In telegram No. 70 of September 20† Mr. Ronning reported on developments which would indicate that Peking did not plan to invade Formosa this season. In his opinion it would be a mistake on the part of the United States to ignore this change of heart and pursue their discussions of the Japanese Peace Treaty without taking into account the interest of the mainland Chinese in the Japanese peace settlement. It seems only reasonable that as soon as they gain control over their own affairs the Japanese must and will do business with the Chinese mainland and will deal with whatever government is in effective control, no matter what its political persuasion may be.

(d) Has thought been given by United States officials to participation in the preliminary discussions by such non-FEC members as Ceylon, Indonesia and the Indo-Chinese states. These states have been recognized as independent states by the United States and their interest in the Japanese peace settlement is an obvious one.

(2) United Nations. It would be of interest to know whether the United States regards Japan's entry to the United Nations as a matter to be dealt with in the Peace Treaty.

Paragraph 5 of the Preamble of the Italian Peace Treaty notes that the fulfilment of certain conditions "enabled" the Allies to support Italy's application for United Nations membership. However, such an undertaking might prove contentious in the case of Japan. There is something to be said for dealing with this matter outside the Peace Treaty. The United States could sponsor Japan's entry and any difficulties which might occur would not affect the treaty of peace.

(3) Territories. The status of the Ryukyu and Bonin Islands is distinguished in the United States memorandum from that of the other components of the former Japanese Empire. United States officials might be willing to give in more detail their arguments in support of such a distinction.

The terms of the Cairo Declaration insofar as it applied to Formosa have been accepted in principle by the Canadian Cabinet. It might be advisable therefore to indicate our general ideas in this regard and to ascertain if possible the arguments which the United States plans to advance in support of a "future decision" for matters which have already been determined in wartime agreements of the Four Great Powers. Disposition of the territories in question should be given careful consideration before the General Assembly is saddled with the task of enforcing territorial decisions on such powerful states as China (Formosa and the Pescadores) and the U.S.S.R. (Sakhalin and the Kuriles), who would be the contesting powers.

It would be interesting to get the reaction of United States officials to the idea of simply having Japan renounce its claims to the territories involved leaving the issue of their disposition to be settled outside the Peace Treaty.

(4) Security. The United States proposals in this regard do not go far towards a solution of what has always been the most contentious issue of the Japanese Peace Treaty. It may be possible to obtain some clarification of United States intentions along the following lines:

(a) Do United States officials regard Japanese security as a matter to be dealt with in the treaty or rather as the subject of bilateral agreements negotiated with Japan when its full sovereignty has been restored? Our initial reaction is that the inclusion in the Peace Treaty of a United States guarantee of Japanese security, no matter how guarded the reference may be, would destroy any chance of the acceptance of the treaty by the U.S.S.R. and China.

(b) Has the United States given thought to the problem of satisfying the understandable desire on the part of some of her wartime allies to be assured that security is offered them against possible Japanese military resurgence.

The United States stand on behalf of the United Nations in Korea will have made a favourable impression, but certain states may be satisfied to see Japan become fully sovereign only if some almost automatic guarantee of their security against Japan is provided by the United States or by some combination of powers, including the United States, committed to preserve the peace in the Pacific area.

(5) Political and Commercial Arrangements. The adherence by Japan to bilateral United States-Canadian fishing and pelagic sealing agreements should be the subject of separate study by the fishery experts of the two countries. In the writing of the commercial clauses of the Japanese Peace Treaty consideration will have to be given to methods by which Japan can be brought to adhere to the generally accepted standards of commercial behaviour. The subject of reciprocal most-favoured-nation treatment is one on which even preliminary comment is difficult until detailed study of such a policy is made by commercial experts in the larger context of other treaty provisions.

(6) Claims. It would be valuable to have some clarification of the United States attitude towards Japanese external assets in neutral countries. Canada would be interested in these external assets for inclusion in any general pooling arrangements which may be decided upon by the Government.

It might be desirable to raise with United States officials the question of occupation costs. We would wish to protect the charges incurred by the Canadian Liaison Mission in Japan by reason of goods and services obtained under the system of procurement demand.

The Japanese "gold pot" is likely to be a difficult issue since there is disagreement between the United States and the United Kingdom on its proper disposition. United States officials might be willing to detail their position in this regard.

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Repeat Washington No. 188.
Your No. 544 of September 29th. Japanese Peace Treaty.

Both Mr. Pearson and Mr. Dulles have been so occupied with other matters this week that the anticipated meeting on the question of the Japanese Peace Treaty has been somewhat delayed. In the meantime, Mr. Allison suggested that he might discuss the United States memorandum informally with Mr. Collins, and this was done yesterday. Mr. Collins took up as many of the points mentioned in your teletype as time permitted, and Mr. Allison's comments were as follows:

(1) Parties and Procedure

(a) The present discussions in New York are quite informal, and the State Department have apparently not tried to develop any very definite plans. Mr. Allison said that the preliminary comments of the FEC Governments on the points in the United States memorandum could be presented either orally or in writing, and that while it had not been suggested that these comments should be brought together and circulated, this could probably be done if those concerned considered it useful.

(b) There are also no plans for a round-table meeting with representatives of FEC Governments for joint informal discussions, but this too could be arranged.

(c) At this stage, the United States has no specific proposal regarding the problem of Nationalist and Communist Chinese participation, beyond the position indicated by Mr. Dulles in his briefing of United States correspondents in Washington when it was pointed out that, since the United States is in diplomatic relations only with the nationalists, any conversations at this stage would have to be with them. Mr. Dulles has not gone out of his way to initiate discussions with the Chinese, but we understand from Mr. Allison that Ambassador Koo[23] has asked for an interview, which will probably take place next week. (With reference to Soviet participation, Mr. Dulles saw Mr. Malik in the corridor at Lake Success last week and mentioned the fact that these discussions were taking place. Mr. Malik's only reaction was to remark that the United States could hardly be very serious about a Japanese Peace Treaty since General MacArthur obviously did not want to leave Japan. The United States attitude now seems to be that an opening has been given to the Russians, and that since they did not take the opportunity to go into the question further, the next step is up to them.) On the problem of eventual Chinese participation in a conference, if a conference is held, Mr. Allison said that the United States simply do not have any constructive ideas at this time. He pointed out that it would in any event be extremely doubtful whether, even if a formula were found whereby the Chinese Communists might be associated in the proceedings, they would be willing to go along with any treaty which involved the type of security provision envisaged by the United States. He also referred once more to the suggestion which he had made before on a personal basis that the conference problem might be avoided by the signing of individual treaties, once the text had been agreed to as a result of discussions among the Governments concerned. Whether or not a conference will be held, and what form it will take, will depend to a large extent on the reactions and suggestions of FEC Governments arising out of present discussions. It is hoped that, if there is a conference, it would be very brief.

(d) It is intended to hold discussions with Ceylon and Indonesia after the preliminary conversations with FEC countries have been completed, and it is hoped that the latter conversations will have produced results by the end of November. The State Department is still considering the question of what should be done about Indo-China.

(e) It is also intended to have informal discussions with Japanese leaders after the preliminary conversations here. These will be with representatives of both the Government and opposition parties.

(2) United Nations

The present intention of the United States is that the question of Japanese application for membership in the United Nations should be referred to in the Treaty itself, with an implication that support should be given by the other signatories. Mr. Allison said that he realized this question had been raised in the Commonwealth Working Party discussions in London, and that some doubts had been expressed. He also said that he found it difficult to understand the basis for these doubts, and that in his view it was of considerable psychological importance to include something along these lines in the Treaty, even though it might in fact be impossible to achieve Japanese membership in the United Nations owing to the anticipated opposition of the U.S.S.R.

(3) Territories

Mr. Allison commented that this section of the memorandum had been drafted some time ago, and should not be taken as too firm a proposal on the part of the United States. This applies particularly to Part C, in view of the fact that the question of Formosa is now on the agenda of both the Security Council and the General Assembly. He is fully aware of the difficulties involved in attempting to have the Assembly determine the status of such territories as Formosa and the Kuriles, and said that the United States would of course welcome any suggestion which other Governments might wish to put forward. With regard to the Commonwealth Working Party proposal that in the Treaty Japan should simply renounce its claims to the territories involved, leaving the issue of their disposition to be settled outside the Treaty, he said that, while this course might eventually have to be adopted, the United States would prefer to handle the problem in a slightly different way. For example, it might prove useful in the future if Japan had not, in the Treaty, categor-ically renounced her claims to the Kuriles. With reference to the Ryukyus and Bonins somewhat similar considerations were involved, since it might seem sensible at a later date — say 25 years — to return some of these islands to Japan. Hence the suggestion that Japan should in the Treaty agree to recognize United States trusteeship if this were accepted by the United Nations, a provision which should be more flexible than simply renunciation of sovereignty. With specific reference to the proposal that the status of Formosa, etc., be determined if possible by agreement among the four Powers, Mr. Allison remarked that this idea resulted partly from a desire to provide some continuity with the Cairo decisions, partly from the precedent in the Italian Treaty, and partly from the notion that the inclusion of the Kuriles and Sakhalin might give some sort of a lever to use against the U.S.S.R. He did not seem, however, to be too convinced that this provision would be a useful one.

(4) Security

(a) Present United States thinking as reflected in the memorandum regards the question of Japanese security as one which should be dealt with both in the Treaty and in a detailed supplementary bilateral agreement (or agreements). The reason for this is primarily to give the security arrangements as much multilateral colour as possible. This is in the interests of both the United States and Japan, and is considered particularly important from the standpoint of obtaining Japanese acquiescence. We hope later to see the actual draft of the proposed provision in the Treaty, but as Mr. Allison explained it, it would refer in general terms to the security aims of the United Nations Charter and state that, pending adequate security arrangements (e.g. under the aegis of the United Nations) the Japanese would agree to provide such facilities as might be required and as are within their capacity, while the United States (and such other nations as might wish to do so) would furnish forces. Mr. Allison said that this would not involve an indefinite commitment either on the part of the United States or of any other signatory to guarantee Japanese security. He also referred to the expectation that the Japanese could eventually assume more and more responsibility themselves (i.e. rearmament). He agreed that the inclusion of such a provision in the Treaty would probably destroy any chance of its acceptance by the U.S.S.R. and China, but obviously did not consider this too serious an objection, since he does not think that there would be much chance of such acceptance in any case. As you know, the assumption in the State Department all along has been that, knowing United States intentions in general terms, the U.S.S.R. and China would only accept a treaty which contained some provision definitely prohibiting any security arrangements along the lines contemplated.

(b) On the question of security against Japan, Mr. Allison merely said that other countries must be realistic about the present situation. The important objective is to ensure, insofar as possible, that Japan is denied to the other side and is voluntarily associated with the free democracies. Security measures in the Treaty would militate against such voluntary association. As to the need for assurances outside the Treaty, the facts should be adequate to provide such assurance for the relevant future, if the United States maintains forces in Japan and bases in Okinawa and the Philippines.

(5) Political and Commercial Arrangements

Mr. Allison said that the draft United States provision on adherence to multilateral agreements contained a fairly long list, which, when analyzed, appeared to boil down to narcotics and fishing. He agreed that the special United States-Canadian problem with respect to fishing should be discussed further at an early date by fisheries experts. He said that it is desired to avoid as much as possible the inclusion of provisions in the Treaty which would impose obligations on Japan without some corresponding benefits. Japan's adherence to multilateral conventions would not fall within this category, but provisions whereby Japan might be required to observe the conservation measures of other signatories in connection with off-coast fishing would probably be open to this objection. Hence it is felt that anything of this sort should be handled through bilateral negotiations outside the Treaty. With reference to the proposed granting of most-favoured-nation treatment, he said that this would, of course, be reciprocal. He also recognized the difficulties with which we are faced on this question, and that it would have to be given a good deal of detailed study.

(6) Claims

Mr. Allison said that the question of Japanese external assets in neutral countries is largely an academic one, since he doubts whether there will be many such assets available. He thought that the charges incurred by our Liaison Mission in Japan under the system of procurement demand would be protected.

(7) General Political Provisions

Mr. Allison said that the United States draft does have a brief section dealing with the kind of thing covered by the human rights clauses in the Italian Treaty and with the achievements of the occupation. It is apparently in rather general terms, and in the form of a statement of intent on the part of the Japanese rather than an obligation to which they must be held.

(8) Regime of Control and the FEC

Mr. Allison thinks that, with the rapid clearing up of the Korean situation, a treaty might come into effect in about a year's time, or perhaps even sooner. Meanwhile, the FEC would presumably continue, and he said that one of the questions which the United States might like to discuss would be the possibility of using the Commission to achieve some of the objectives of the Treaty before final ratification. As to the fate of the FEC, on the assumption that neither China nor the U.S.S.R. were parties to the Treaty, he said that the United States had no very clear idea of how the Commission would be dissolved, but assumed that some way out could be found.

The United States would appreciate our comments and any suggestions we might wish to make as soon as we have had an opportunity to consider their memorandum. As indicated above, it is hoped that this initial phase of the discussion can be completed by the end of November.

TELEGRAM 557 Ottawa, October 13, 1950

SECRET. IMPORTANT.

Your telegram No. 702 of October 7.† Japanese Peace Treaty.

1. Following are points we consider could serve as a useful basis for discussions between Mr. Pearson and Mr. Dulles, bearing in mind the ground covered by Collins' interview with Allison (your telegram No. 701 of October 6) which followed the questions set out in our telegram No. 544 of September 29.

2. Mr. Pearson might base his discussion on two different approaches to the Japanese Peace Treaty which are set out below and which are basic to consideration of details of the final settlement.

(a) Is it the intention to try to draft a treaty whose provisions because of their reasonableness and soundness should be acceptable to all interested parties, or

(b) one containing provisions which the United States would find convenient to have in the treaty and which the United States thinks will be acceptable to non-Communist governments. This latter approach would assume that Soviet agreement to important substantive as well as procedural points cannot be obtained and that there is no easy way to associate the Peking Government in the discussions at this stage.

3. The approach noted in 2(a) above would have certain obvious advantages.

(a) Even if Russia and Communist China refused to go along with such a treaty they could find little in it to criticize for propaganda purposes.

(b) The two Communist powers would have to come around to some such treaty eventually if they wished to establish relations with Japan since they could not offer less reasonable terms and expect to excite Japanese interest.

(c) Such a treaty would be less susceptible to criticism from Japanese sources.

The adoption of this approach would mean leaving out of the treaty contentious points such as United States-Japanese security arrangements. These arrangements would have to be made as a result of post treaty bilateral negotiations.

4. Parties and Procedure

(a) Chinese Participation

(i) Questions relating to China cannot be considered in isolation. They must be considered in their broad Asian context and we must expect Asian countries to have strong views on these questions. The Japanese Peace Treaty is also an important Asian problem. Asian opinion is certain to regard the relationships between Japan and mainland China as among the most important factors in the future of the area. Exclusion of the effective government of China from participation in discussions of the Japanese Peace Treaty will be difficult for Asian states such as India, Pakistan and Ceylon to understand or accept.

(ii) We may be certain that India will sound out Peking on the Japanese Peace Treaty. If we are working toward a peace treaty which should be acceptable to the mainland Chinese, such Indian endeavours might be looked upon with favour.

(iii) Arguments on participation of the Peking Government in the discussions which Asian states advance are given added weight when we consider the traditional economic and political relationship between Japan and the Chinese mainland. Failure to include representatives of the effective government of China can only lead to post treaty difficulties in the period when Japan must and will do business with the Chinese mainland.

(iv) Aside from the wider Asian significance of the question, the Peking Government does fulfil requirements of the international law for de jure recognition, i.e. effective control, a prospect of permanency, ostensible freedom from external control and the apparent acquiescence of the majority of the population. The establishment of relations between democratic powers and the Peking Government would present the opportunity to exploit natural points of conflict between China and the U.S.S.R. and might increase Chinese bargaining power vis-à-vis the U.S.S.R. Recognition of the new government may not be possible, but an attempt should be made to find a means to give that government an opportunity to participate in Japanese Peace Treaty discussions even if its agreement to final terms cannot be obtained. The onus for failure to cooperate could then be placed squarely where it belongs.

(v) In the light of these facts, we would be unwilling to follow a procedure which would allow us to drift into a position where we are forced to accept the Nationalist Government as a signatory of the treaty.

It might be suggested to Mr. Dulles that for the record the United States memorandum should be given to the Russians as it is being given to the other Far Eastern Commission countries. The corridor approach noted in paragraph 1(c) of your telegram No. 701 does not seem adequate.

(c) Discussions with the Japanese

We should hope that the United States Government would not take any steps to discuss their proposals with the Japanese Government before some measure of agreement has been reached with other governments. The Japanese may be expected to take the United States proposals as the minimum they can expect and seek to bargain upward from there.

5. Security

(a) Acceptance of the approach in 2(a) above would make it very difficult to write into the treaty anything about United States-Japanese security arrangements but would not prevent post treaty negotiations of some such bilateral defence agreement.

(b) The United States suggestion outlined by Allison in his interview with Collins that Japan should agree in the treaty to provide facilities while other members of the United Nations would furnish forces, presents difficulties which must have occurred to United States officials. The Russians might be only too ready to furnish forces under such a scheme in order to establish themselves securely in Japan. We would think it necessary to see the actual draft of the proposed provision in the treaty before we were in a position to comment on its merits.

(c) Mr. Pearson might wish to refer to an article by Thomas J. Hamilton in the New York Times of October 10 and ask Mr. Dulles how correct Mr. Hamilton is in stating that the United States will not seek rights under the treaty but hopes that the Japanese Government will of its own volition request the United States to maintain troops in the home islands after the treaty takes effect.

Hamilton makes another point in connection with United States discussions of the Japanese Peace Treaty with the Russians. He may simply be attempting to give a significance greater than is deserved to the most informal approach Mr. Dulles made to Mr. Malik. (see paragraph 4(b) above). However, in discussing the article Mr. Dulles may be prepared to say more of United States contact with the Russians on the problem.

6. No attempt has been made in this teletype to deal with each of the topics covered in the United States memorandum. We believe it may be more useful to us in later detailed discussions if we could get at this stage the ideas of United States officials on these basic aspects of the Japanese Peace settlement. In the event that this approach does not prove fruitful as a basis for discussion it might be wise to have Mr. Collins prepare supplementary questions for Mr. Pearson's use, based on our telegram No. 544 and his interview with Mr. Allison.

FAR EAST: JAPANESE PEACE TREATY

(c.f. Heads of Divisions Meeting Report No. 42 Oct. 16, 1950)

Mr. Menzies. No opportunity has yet been presented for discussions between Mr. Pearson and Mr. Dulles, but there have been developments of interest in the past week.

(1) The United Kingdom favours approaching United States officials on the basis of the report of the Commonwealth Working Party which has been given to the State Department, and attempting to find out wherein United States thinking differs from that of delegations to the Working Party and how serious the differences are. We have indicated that we would not wish the importance of the report to be over-emphasized, since it was merely a summary of views put forward at the official level.

(2) Australia has indicated its agreement to the meeting of Commonwealth representatives. We have been informed that Mr. Spender has been taking every opportunity to point out to United States officials the importance he attaches to some form of security guarantee for Australia. He has stressed that some security agreement is wanted whether there is a Japanese Peace Treaty or not. Mr. Spender's hope is that Australia can be associated with any group, large or small, which carries with it United States commitments along the lines of those in the North Atlantic Treaty.

(3) Mr. Malik has approached Mr. Dulles to make it clear that he is ready to discuss the United States memorandum at any time. A meeting has been arranged for this week.

(4) The United Kingdom representative has let United States officials know informally that Commonwealth discussions are being proposed. Mr. Dulles' reaction was unfavourable. His view is that it would be preferable first to have thorough discussions with individual countries.

(5) Mr. Allison indicated to Mr. Collins that it would be useful to him if he could have something in writing from us however informal, spelling out our questions and raising any doubts we may have. (Secret)

The memorandum recommends that no action be taken at this time to recognize the Indo-Chinese states. Draft Memorandum to Cabinet

RECOGNITION OF THE INDO-CHINESE STATES OF VIET NAM, CAMBODIA AND LAOS

On February 3 we received notes from the French Ambassador in Ottawa, informing us that the French Government had ratified the treaties constituting Viet Nam (under Bao Dai), Cambodia and Laos as associate states within the French Union and requesting that we recognize these states.

Recognition has been extended to the three states by the United Kingdom, the United States, Australia, New Zealand and Belgium. The Soviet Union and the Chinese Communist Government have recognized the rebel "Democratic Republic of Viet Nam", led by the Communist Ho Chi Minh.

Arguments for Recognition

(1) The main argument is political. Indo-China is a region of strategic importance in South East Asia. Bao Dai and Ho Chi Minh are both striving for the support of Indo-Chinese nationalists. The Soviet and Peiping governments have moved to a strengthen the hand of Ho Chi Minh by according him recognition.

(ii) The French might interpret reluctance on our part to recognize Bao Dai as evincing lack of confidence in French policy in Indo-China.

(iii) The Communist party in France is waging an active propaganda campaign against the Bao Dai regime in Indo-China. They are concentrating on this issue in the hope of dividing the Socialists from the other moderate parties in France. This situation is a cause of grave embarrassment to the French government. Recognition of Viet Nam might be some contribution to internal stability in France, in the face of this Communist threat.

Arguments against Recognition

(1) Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos do not fulfil the customary legal requirements for recognition of states. These governments have not themselves yet ratified the agreements concluded with the French. Even under the terms of the agreements, the French retain a large measure of control over foreign affairs, defence and finance. Furthermore, Bao Dai's government is in effective control over only a limited part of the territory of Viet Nam. Ho Chi Minh, on the other hand, controls a large area and for the present appears to have the acquiescence of a considerable portion of the inhabitants of this area.

(ii) Asian states, led by India, have been unsympathetic to the Bao Dai government. Mr. Nehru stated at Colombo that he lacked confidence in French intentions to effect a real transfer of power and he regarded Bao Dai as a puppet of the French, who would be unable to gain nationalist support. Canadian recognition would result in an undesirable "white versus Asiatic" alignment within the Commonwealth on this issue.

(iii) Canada has no direct interest in Indo-China, nor would Canadian recognition of the Bao Dai government greatly influence the situation. There is not the political necessity therefore, at the moment, for Canada to disregard the arguments in (i) and (ii) above.

(iv) By withholding recognition, Canada might be in a position to influence the French government to make an effective transfer of power to Bao Dai.

Recommendation

It is recommended that (i) no action be taken at this time to recognize the states of Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos; (ii) in order to avoid misinterpretation of this by the French, the Secretary of State for External Affairs might, under appropriate circumstances in the House of Commons, make a brief and sympathetic reference to the establishment of Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos as associate states within the French Union; (iii) the French Ambassador be informed that the question of recognition of Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos is being given further consideration.

SECRET. IMMEDIATE.

Following for Minister from Heeney, Begins: Yesterday the Ambassador took me to see Parodi with whom I had an interesting talk. He was not long in getting to the subject of Bao Dai. It was evident at once that Indo-China is at present the most serious preoccupation of the Quai d'Orsay. Parodi expects the proposed meeting of Mr. Schuman with Mr. Bevin and Mr. Acheson to take place quite soon after President Auriol's return from London. It will be concerned primarily with South East Asia.

(2) I explained to the Secretary-General that since your return from Colombo you had been discussing with your colleagues a number of Far Eastern questions of which the most important was that of the Canadian attitude toward the Peiping regime. I could give no encouragement to any idea that the Canadian Government would agree to recognize Bao Dai, certainly not in the near future. I said that he would appreciate the fact that Canada had little or no direct interest in Indo-China itself.

(3) It was evident that Parodi was disappointed in what I had to say. He appears to attach considerable importance to our recognition of Bao Dai because of what he called our "autorité morale" He emphasized that, if we were to act, speed was of the essence if an effective barrier was to be established to the South Eastern sweep of Communist imperialism.

(4) With regard to China, Parodi said that the French Government would understand our reasons if we decided to recognize the Chinese Communists. However, they hoped very much that if we felt unable to recognize Bao Dai now, we would give very careful consideration to the possibility of doing so simultaneously with our recognition of Mao Tse Tung. He thought that this would be an important contribution to the effort being made to stabilize the situation in South East Asia.

(5) Because of the emphasis and obvious sincerity of Parodi's remarks and the reasonable way in which he stated the French case for recognition of Bao Dai I said that I would send you direct word at once so that you might have his views in mind when these matters were discussed in Cabinet.

(6) Incidentally I find that the following Governments have now accorded recognition to Bao Dai: Great Britain, Belgium, Australia, New Zealand, United States, Luxembourg, Greece, Bolivia, Italy, Siam, Honduras, Brazil, Costa Rica, Jordan. Ends.

PERSONAL AND CONFIDENTIAL Ottawa, March 13, 1950

Dear Ralph [Collins]:

Thanks for your letter of March 10† filling in informally some of the background of your recent discussions with people in the State Department, particularly Robert Hoey,[25] regarding Indo-China. This type of letter is very useful and I hope you will continue to toss them off even though it may appear to you at times that you are casting seed upon stony ground.

[25] Agent responsable des affaires indochinoises./Officer in Charge, Indochinese Affairs.

2. I confess that on reviewing our file the other day I was astounded to see that we had been remiss for some time about keeping our interested Missions informed about recent developments in our thinking here on the Indo-Chinese problem. This is being remedied in a memorandum† which is being prepared now and which will be sent forward in a few days.

3. We have had some difficulties to contend with. A draft memorandum was prepared some weeks ago on the Minister's instruction setting out the pros and cons on recognition of the Indo-Chinese States. This has been up and back several times and also subjected to various pressures within the Department as there is a difference of view among Mr. Pearson's advisers on the desirability of according recognition at this time. The Minister too appears to be somewhat uncertain as to the tactics he wishes to follow. He has considered, on a couple of occasions, relating this question to that of Chinese recognition which has also been discussed several times in Cabinet. Needless to say, it is both awkward and indiscreet for civil servants to weigh on paper the merits of discussions that they hear at third hand may have taken place in Cabinet on issues of this type.

Yours sincerely,
A.R. MENZIES

TELEGRAM 95 Ottawa, March 16, 1950

Your telegram No. 96 of March 3. Indo-China.

1. I should be grateful if you would seek an early opportunity to raise this question with Parodi and tell him that very careful consideration is still being given here to the possibility of according recognition to the new Indo-Chinese states and their governments. My statement in the House on February 22 indicates that the Canadian Government is aware of the critical importance of developments in Indo-China and that the recent efforts of the French Government to adjust relations with the Indo-Chinese are a step in the right direction that we view sympathetically.

2. There are, however, a number of difficulties to be overcome in reaching a decision to accord recognition. One of these is our lack of information concerning the steps taken in Indo-China to implement the agreements which are couched in very broad terms. If there has been substantial progress made, we think the French should make every effort to publish evidence demonstrating that the promulgation of the agreements and recognition by the United States and the United Kingdom have succeeded in winning substantial new support for Bao Dai. Some foreign news reporters, as you will have seen, seem to be having some after thoughts about the wisdom of the action taken by the United States and United Kingdom in according early recognition. We attach much importance to the attitude taken by Asian countries, particularly India and think that the French should make a great effort to determine the nature of Indian reservations and see how these can be met. It is my personal opinion that much could be done to improve the climate of Indian opinion if the French were to review their position regarding their enclaves in India which have been a cause of serious and prolonged irritation to Franco-India relations.

RECOGNITION OF THE INDO-CHINESE STATES OF VIET NAM, CAMBODIA AND LAOS

On February 3 the French Ambassador sent in three Notes† giving notification that the French Government had ratified the treaties constituting Viet Nam (under Bao Dai), Cambodia and Laos as Associate States within the French Union and requesting Canadian recognition for them.

2. Recognition has been extended to these three States by nineteen non-Communist states, viz. United States, United Kingdom, Belgium, Australia, New Zealand, South Africa, Luxembourg, Greece, Bolivia, Italy, Thailand, Jordan, South Korea, Spain, Honduras, Brazil, Cuba, Costa Rica and the Holy Sea. The United Kingdom employed the following formula in extending recognition: "H.M. Government in the United Kingdom recognizes the status of Viet Nam as an Associate State within the French Union in accordance with the terms of the Agreement dated March 8, 1949 between President Auriol and His Majesty Bao Dai, and recognizes the Government of His Majesty Bao Dai as the government of that state". This formula has been followed by a number of other countries and falls considerably short of full recognition of a sovereign state and government. The United States Government extended "diplomatic recognition" without qualification or explanation.

3. The rebel "Democratic Republic of Viet Nam" led by Communist leader Ho Chi Minh has been recognized by the Soviet Union, Yugoslavia, the Chinese Communist Government and other Communist states.

4. There are some facts in general agreement. These begin with the fact that Indo-China is today probably the most critical soft spot in Asia which the Communist are probing. It is the only good land route from Communist China into Southeast Asia. If it falls, the way will be open to Thailand which is unlikely to put up serious resistance, and to other parts of Southeast Asia. Indo-China and Thailand produce two-thirds of the world's exports of rice which is a critical factor in maintaining stability in the Indian sub-continent. Laos and Cambodia are sleepy little kingdoms with under 5 million population and can be ignored for the purpose of this discussion. Viet Nam, which occupies the coastal area from North to South, has a population of 20 million active and strongly nationalist Annamese. Ho Chi Minh is a known-Communist who has the apparent support of a strong anti-colonial nationalist movement which occupies 75% of the country, or all but the deltas of Mekong and Red Rivers and a few garrison posts and communications lines. Bao Dai has been given by the French about as much power as his weak administration can manage, but apparently not enough to satisfy the nationalist aspirations of even many of his supporters. There is no apparent alternative to the Bao Dai regime in Indo-China at the present time except that of Communist Ho Chi Minh.

Arguments for Recognition

5. The main argument is political. Indo-China is a region of strategic importance in Southeast Asia. Bao Dai and Ho Chi Minh are both striving for the support of Indo-Chinese nationalists. International recognition of the three states would contribute to blocking the expansion of Communist influence in Southeast Asia by encouraging Bao Dai's supporters both inside and outside of Viet Nam. Recognition by the Soviet Union and Communist China of the Ho Chi Minh regime constitutes an open challenge and puts the question of recognition of the Indo-Chinese states into the context of the cold war.

6. The Communist Party in France is waging an active and violent propaganda campaign against the Bao Dai regime in Indo-China. They are concentrating on this issue in the hope of dividing the Socialists from the other moderate parties in France. There are indications that the Communists may hope to make out of a political crisis over Indo-China a critical test of strength in France. This situation is a cause of grave embarrassment to the French Government. Recognition of Viet Nam might be some contribution to internal stability in France, in the face of this Communist threat.

7. If, through recognition and the granting of military and financial assistance, Bao Dai was enabled to consolidate his position, some of the 125,000 French troops in Indo-China would be released to add to the forces France could contribute in Europe. This is, however, not an early prospect.

8. Recognition need only be commensurate with the terms of the treaties between the three states and France, that is, as associate states within the French Union following the United Kingdom formula as given in paragraph 2 above. Recognition of this nature would not constitute recognition of the existence of three new fully-sovereign states in the international community but would only constitute recognition of the treaty arrangements.

9. The French appear to attach importance to Canadian recognition of the Indo-Chinese states. Repeated representations have been made by the French Embassy here and the Secretary-General of the French Ministry of Foreign Affairs recently raised the question with the Canadian Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs in Paris. If recognition is not extended, the French might interpret this as a lack of confidence on our part towards their policy in Indo-China and a failure to appreciate their difficulties at home and in Indo-China.

Arguments against Recognition

10. Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos do not fulfil the customary legal requirements for recognition of states. These governments have not themselves yet ratified the agreements concluded with the French. Even under the terms of the agreements, the French retain a large measure of control over foreign affairs, defence and finance. Furthermore, Bao Dai's government is in effective control over 25% of the territory in Viet Nam. Ho Chi Minh, on the other hand, controls 75% of the area and for the present appears to have the acquiescence of 80% of the population of this area.

11. Consideration should be given to the views of Asian states in this matter. These states, led by India, have in general been unsympathetic to the Bao Dai Government and no Asian state except Thailand and Jordan has yet recognized Bao Dai. Mr. Nehru stated at Colombo that he lacked confidence in French intentions to effect a real transfer of power and he regarded Bao Dai as a puppet of the French, who would be unable to gain nationalist support. Canadian recognition would result in an undesirable "white versus Asian alignment" within the Commonwealth on this issue.

12. Canada has no direct interest in Indo-China, nor would Canadian recognition of the Bao Dai government greatly influence the situation. There is not, therefore, at the moment the same urgent political necessity for Canada to recognize these three states as existed for the United States and the United Kingdom.

13. The French have not been content with United Kingdom and United States recognition but are now asking these governments to give tangible military and financial support. If Canada recognized a similar approach might be expected.

Conclusion

14. Canadian recognition of the three Indo-Chinese states would be regarded by the governments of these states, by France, and by the other recognizing governments as striking a blow for the democratic side in the cold war. Recognition, if accorded, should be along the formula employed by the United Kingdom. This would not constitute recognition of independent states. If an explanation of the qualifications was given in the House at the time of recognition or in reply to questions, the announcement of recognition would lose much of its political warfare usefulness.

15. Perhaps the main argument against even qualified recognition is that it might weaken the impression which you tried to create during your recent visit to India, Pakistan and Ceylon, that the Canadian Government was anxious to understand and take fully into account in formulating its foreign policy the viewpoints of our Asian partners in the Commonwealth.

16. Finally it is germane to ask what is the central problem posed by the current crisis in Indo-China? Is it not, "How can Indo-China be saved from falling under Communist control and what steps should the democratic powers take to assist in the rescue?" Recognition is only one way of assisting, and it is possible that its importance has been exaggerated. Leaving aside the political measures required, on which there is a difference of view, material assistance in arms and economic aid are perhaps most critically needed. The French are pressing the United States and United Kingdom with these requirements now. Some suggestions concerning ways in which Canada might render economic aid may emerge from the meeting of the Commonwealth Consultative Committee in Sydney and should be given sympathetic consideration.[26]

Dear Mr. Heeney:

I read with interest the departmental memorandum on the recognition of the Indo-Chinese states of Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos dated May 5 on which you invited by comments in your letter of May 8th.† The memorandum seems to me a very comprehensive statement of the principal considerations bearing on the question of the recognition of the Indo-Chinese states and I propose to confine my comments at this stage to a few points of emphasis.

The question of the recognition of the Indo-Chinese states has three main aspects — the legal, the political and the military. The position taken by the United States Government has been determined primarily on the basis of political and military considerations. The strategic importance of Indo-China made it important to the United States Government to support the endeavours of the French Government to resist the further expansion of Communism into this region. The step taken by the United States to recognize Bao Dai was a measure of political support to the French Government in its efforts to build up a force in Indo-China which would serve as a counter-attraction to Indo-Chinese nationalists who might otherwise give their support to Ho Chi Minh. This step was taken also in recognition of the fact that the principal strength of Ho Chi Minh's movement has been in the nationalism of the Indo-Chinese people rather than his military strength. For this reason, the United States Government has also been pressing the French Government to extend self-government in the Indo-Chinese states.

To this political measure of recognition of Bao Dai, has now been added the United States promise of military and economic aid. If this is followed up by tangible results in the form of the arrival of military equipment as well as material improvement in conditions in Viet Namese territory, it may be expected that Indo-Chinese nationalists will tend to drop their support for the Ho Chi Minh movement. It is obviously upon such expectations that the present policy of the United States Government has been based.

While I entirely agree with the conclusions stated in the departmental paper that "material assistance in arms and economic aid are perhaps more critically needed" than political measures such as recognition, the act of recognition, if appropriately timed, could have appreciable effect upon the situation. Assuming that the present efforts of the French Government supported by measures of assistance given by the United States Government, (together with any other practical measures which may result from the Sydney Conference) may improve the military and political situation in Indo-China in favour of the anti-Communist forces (and in the opinion of the State Department the situation already shows signs of improving), further recognition of the Bao Dai regime, particularly on the part of some of the Asian countries of the Commonwealth, might well have a telling effect. In this connection, the position of Ceylon and Pakistan, in particular, seems to me to be of special importance. While the Indian Government may not be disposed to change its position, it is conceivable that the Governments of Ceylon and Pakistan who are not so firmly committed to the attitude of regarding Bao Dai as a "puppet" government, might well decide to recognize Bao Dai, especially if recognition is accorded by the Governments of the Philippines and Indonesia.

The United States Government has so far refrained from influencing the decisions of Asian countries on the issue of recognition of the Indo-Chinese states. It will probably continue not to apply direct pressure on these governments. However, the Government of the Philippines has not been critical of the acts of recognition so far accorded to Bao Dai and the Indonesian Government likewise has not taken any definite line on the issue of recognition.

It seems to me, therefore, that in considering the question of recognition by the Canadian Government, we might take into account the possibility of recognition on the part of Asian countries to which I have referred. This would presumably simplify our problem and remove the main impediment to our recognition, to which reference is made in paragraph 15 of the departmental memorandum.

From a legal standpoint, I agree that the recognition need only be commensurate with the terms of the treaties between the three states and France, that is, as associated states within the French Union following the formula adopted by the United Kingdom Government in granting recognition.

When Collins returns from London I may have some further comments to offer in the light of the discussions of the Southeast Asian problems which have taken place between the Foreign Ministers.

Yours sincerely,
H.H. WRONG

High Commissioner in United Kingdom

SECRET London, May 25, 1950

Dear Mr. Heeney,

We were very glad to receive with the Department's letter of May 8† the text of the Departmental memorandum of May 5 on recognition of the new Associate States of the French Union and of the Bao Dai regime in Viet Nam.

As a preliminary comment I would suggest a more clear-cut distinction between "recognition" (so-called) of the treaty arrangements establishing the Associate States and recognition, in the accepted sense, of the Bao Dai regime as the de jure Government of Viet Nam. While the latter cannot of course be granted without the validity of the former being recognized, the following reasons suggest that they be treated separately under a joint title:

(a) to take the most obvious reason, they are distinct acts, having different requirements and consequences not only in theory but particularly in the present case;

(b) their comparative importance seems to me to differ, in that the essence of the problem is support for Bao Dai against Ho Chi-Minh in the cold war, whether by recognition or by military or economic aid;

(c) the United Kingdom recognized both the Associate States and the Bao Dai Government while on the other side the Soviet Union and the Peiping government recognized both the "Democratic Republic of Viet Nam" and the Ho Chi Minh regime, thus striking both at the treaty arrangements and at Bao Dai.

There is also a legal point which is not altogether clear to me. The memorandum at paragraph 10 states that one argument against "recognizing" the Associate States is that they do not meet the customary requirements of sovereign states. It had been my understanding that no-one thought that they were sovereign states or that they deserved recognition as such. Is it not rather a matter of "recognizing" the situation created by the agreements and of giving moral support to French policy?[27] It would

[27] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
Then how can you recognize Bao-Dai's regime as the Government? [A.R. Menzies] seem that Mr. Acheson has now agreed to give moral support. (Despatch No. 393 of May 11† from Paris).

To turn to the larger considerations, I would of course share the view that there is not the same direct urgency for Canada as for certain other countries and that the importance of recognition may have declined relatively to other forms of support. Even if this were so, however, our withholding of recognition of either kind might well imply in the world at large, and in Viet Nam, some legal doubt or some disapproval on our part of French policy or Bao Dai, or of both. I do not detect in the memorandum any of that moral disapproval which has played its part in United States opinion about recognition of the Peiping regime. Paragraph 8 of the memorandum, moreover, seems to show that we would find it appropriate to "recognize" the Associate States in the manner of the United Kingdom, though recognition of the Bao Dai Government is not specifically considered. I suppose that the Department might have legal doubts about Bao Dai on the grounds of the degree of control of the territory and of habitual allegiance. That is perhaps a difficult point, because the Bao Dai regime is a new one, like the Indonesian Government, and because the urgency of the situation in South-East Asia, with all its potentialities for disaster, creates a desire to support France and Bao Dai.

Setting aside legal considerations the chief objection to be weighed against the desire to help France and Bao Dai and the risk of being misunderstood abroad is, I should judge, the desirability of avoiding a step which would tend towards the growth of a "white versus Asian alignment" within the Commonwealth.

If the problem posed by Indian policy is stated only in terms of alignment within the Commonwealth, it seems almost insuperable. No change of Indian policy seems to be in the offing. However, if we are not to be forced towards a unified Commonwealth foreign policy in Asia — on Indian terms — it might be wise not to overstress the idea of disalignment. At any rate, of the Commonwealth countries only the United Kingdom is so far out of line with India and Pakistan. Some idea of the urgency which the United Kingdom must have felt is given by the facts that the United Kingdom certainly values as much as we do the Commonwealth as a bridge with the East and that apart from the Commonwealth association it already labours under Indian suspicion as a legacy of pre-partition days and over Kashmir. Doubts on the Labour left-wing were also overridden, and at a time when the General Election was imminent and the Labour "Keep-Left" group had published its own separate election manifesto. It occurs to me that if we decided to recognize, our representative in New Delhi could explain our position to Nehru and remove much of the risk of seeming to create a "white" camp. We do, after all, recognize and admit the reality and the danger of the cold war for ourselves, whereas Nehru does not in practice for India. That may be the real alignment when a situation becomes dangerous. Again, India is swayed by France's behaviour concerning the enclaves, while we are not.

Looking at the matter in broader terms of Canadian foreign policy, it might be noted that we are at present out of alignment with both the United States and the United Kingdom. Furthermore, one upshot of the recent Three Power conference in London and of Mr. Acheson's talks in Paris is that the United States, the United Kingdom and France have come much closer together in their South-East Asian policies. If our own line of advance is being conceived of in terms of our general foreign policy and also of our North Atlantic allies as much as in terms of the Commonwealth, the granting of recognition might seem appropriate. However this approach would erect the question to the status of a direct and vital interest of Canada, whereas we are going on the assumption that it is not. It is useful, perhaps, only in showing where we stand among those most important to us. It also reminds me that our Embassy in Washington had an indication from the State Department that it was hoped we would recognize Bao Dai (which is all the United States has done by way of recognition) before, rather than after, we recognized the Peiping regime.

If a brief note on the Department's opinion of these comments were possible, it would be a great help in clarifying our study of future developments in Indo-China and South-East Asia as a whole.

Yours sincerely,
L.D. WILGRESS

L'ambassadeur en France
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

Ambassador in France

SECRET Paris, June 6, 1950

Dear Mr. Heeney,

I have your letter of the 8th May† together with the Inter-Department memorandum on recognition of the Indo-Chinese states of Viet-Nam, Cambodia and Laos. Following are my comments.

The memorandum is a fair and objective "exposé" of the situation. The pros and cons for recognition are well expressed and on balance there is perhaps little to choose if one is to rest one's decision on a scientific appreciation. I believe however, that this is not a case for nice weighing of arguments.

The vital factor in the whole matter is well put in the first three sentences of paragraph 4 of the memorandum:

> "There are some facts in general agreement. These begin with the fact that Indo-China is to-day the most critical soft spot in Asia which the communists are probing. It is the only good land route from communist China into South East Asia. If it falls the way will be open to Thailand which is unlikely to put up serious resistance and to other parts of South East Asia."

The following quotation from paragraph 14 of the memorandum is also pertinent:

"Canadian recognition of the three Indo-Chinese states would be regarded by the governments of these states, by France and by the other recognising governments a striking blow for the democratic side in the cold war."

Indo-China is now the highest stake in the world struggle between communism and democracy. Canada has taken sides fully and irrevocably on the side of democracy and I believe should, with the great democracies of the United States, the United Kingdom and France (not to speak of many minor ones) proclaim this stand to the world and share responsibility in the struggle.

In addition to the above general remarks, I wish to submit the following comments on a few of the paragraphs of the memorandum.

Para. 9.—Yes indeed the French attach great importance to Canadian recognition. One sometimes forgets to what extent the prestige of Canada has increased in the last ten years. If you were to ask any Frenchman and possibly any European today "What are the great countries of the world?" he would place them in the following order: the United States of America, the U.S.S.R., the United Kingdom, France, Canada, whereas before the last war Canada had a vague sort of position among the nations. Ahead of it were Germany, Japan, Italy, China and a few others depending on one's special point of view. Certainly the French interpret non-recognition as a lack of confidence in them and failure on our part to appreciate their terrible difficulties over Indo-China, difficulties for which they are not entirely responsible themselves but which are due more to the wild fire of communism which is spreading throughout the world.

Para. 10.—This requires clarification because the statement that Ho Chi Minh controls 75% of the whole area and has the acquiescence of 80% of the population of this area does not mean anything unless we know what proportion of the population is included in it. To clear up this point I had enquiries made both at the Quai d'Orsay and at the 2ème Bureau. The information obtained is attached as appendices A and B respectively.† This gives a very different picture. I realize of course that it comes from an interested source but after reading it, I find it difficult to accept the figure of 75%. As for the population, well over 50% of it is under the control of Bao-Dai, the French say 66 2/3 %.

Para. 11.—The position of the Asian states is readily understood. Obviously if they back the wrong horse, the decision may be a grave one for them in the immediate future. I wonder if the sole reason for their non-recognition is that they lack confidence in French intentions to effect the real transfer of power! This may well be a pretext. One cannot blame Mr. Nehru for thinking of what may possibly happen to him eventually if he recognises Bao-Dai but this should not deter us. A great deal of nonsense is being talked about French colonialism. As a matter of fact the French would be very glad indeed to get out of Indo-China if they could. It brings them nothing at the present time except trouble there and at home, a terrible loss in men and money but they just can't get out and if they did chaos would result. This is a matter which does not interest France alone — although it does more especially because of the frightful disaster to the French army if Ho Chi Minh succeeds — but is of universal interest in the fight for humanity against communism. In connection with full autonomy for Indo-China, may I refer you to my despatch No. 393 of the 11th May.†

Para. 12.—I am not sure that Canadian recognition or non-recognition will weigh in the balance one way or the other but whether it does or does not, my view is that a country of the importance of Canada having taken sides with democracy against communism should not hesitate to implement its decision.

Para. 13.—If the French have asked for military and financial aid in Indo-China, it is because they know that they cannot hold out alone. It is conceivable that Canada may be asked later for material support as well. This is one of the penalties of being a near great, if not great, nation.

Para. 14.—I am afraid I cannot concur entirely in the statement that "If an explanation of the qualifications was given in the House at the time of recognition or in reply to questions, the announcement of recognition would lose much of its political warfare usefulness". I submit that it would not lose anymore of its political warfare usefulness than in the case of the United Kingdom and other states which adopted the same formula.

Para. 16.—It is possible that the importance of recognition has been exaggerated but it is also possible that it may not have been exaggerated and I have no hesitation in saying that if the United States and the United Kingdom had not recognized the Indo-Chinese states at once, Ho Chi Minh might now be in control.

Yours very sincerely,

GEORGES P. VANIER

Le haut-commissaire en Inde
au sous-secrétaire d'État aux Affaires extérieures

High Commissioner in India

SECRET New Delhi, June 24, 1950

Dear Mr. Heeney:

On my return from hill-station duty I have read with considerable interest your letter of May 8† under cover of which you sent me a copy of the Departmental memorandum dated May 5 on the question of recognition of Viet-Nam, Laos and Cambodia. I have read with equal interest the letters from Mr. Wrong and Mr. Wilgress, commenting on the memorandum, which you sent me under cover of despatches Nos. 274† and 293† of May 23 and June 1.

It seems to me that the departmental memorandum outlines the main considerations very adequately. Mr. Wrong and Mr. Wilgress have, inter alia, discussed the problem presented by the difference between the outlook on this question of most countries of South and South-East Asia and the outlook of the western democracies and other countries which have recognized the associated States. Perhaps I might most usefully comment on this point.

It would certainly be most desirable if, as Mr. Wrong suggests is possible, other countries in South and South-East Asia were to recognize the associated States. Such a development, however, appears unlikely in the near future. Thailand has, of course, recognized them. Although it has been said that this was done because Thailand wanted to put herself in a favourable position as a potential recipient of United States aid, I am told that in February the United States Ambassador informed the Thailand Government that so far as the United States was concerned, the provision of aid to Thailand would be in no way connected with the question of Thailand recognition of Viet Nam, and Cambodia. Whatever the Thailand motive, their recognition, which appears courageous on the face of it, stands out as an exception to the present attitude of most of the countries of South and South-East Asia.

The Philippines may very well lean toward recognition. It is perhaps relevant, though not highly significant, that I have been informed that early this year President [Elpidio] Quirino invited the three associated States to attend the recent conference at Baguio, and that in doing so he intimated that, unless they were willing to join a Pacific Pact, his government would not be prepared to recognize them.

I have no information at the moment regarding the attitude of Ceylon or of Burma, and I will endeavour to advise you about this at an early date. Mr. Johnson reported in his despatch No. 132 of May 15† that Pakistan has no intention of recognizing Bao Dai in the immediate future. As indicated in my despatches Nos. 221 of June 7† and 244 of June 15,† Indonesia is inclined, if anything, toward recognition of Viet-minh. The Indian attitude is already well known to you, and the information given in my despatch No. 246 of June 22† would seem to emphasize India's determination not to recognize Bao Dai but to favour a solution which would foster nationalism in a form which would be more acceptable to India than anything Bao Dai seems able to produce.

It rather looks as though we would wait for long if we were to mark time until the majority of the states in this area were moving toward recognition; and that, conversely, early recognition by us would probably be an act unsupported by similar moves on the part of most of these states. I do not say that this should necessarily be deterred by the fact that within the Commonwealth our recognition would place us alongside the United Kingdom, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa on this question and leave India, Pakistan and perhaps Ceylon in a more neutral position.[28] However, both these considerations, particularly the latter, seem to me important.

So far as India is concerned, it is my belief that recognition of the associated states by the United Kingdom and Australia has been fully understood by the Indian Government and has not been resented by them. I think the Indian Government have simply regarded recognition by these countries as consistent with aspects of their foreign policy to which they attach weight. Recognition by us might be similarly understood by the Indian Government, although our lack of

[28] Note marginale:/Marginal note:
N.B. [A.R. Menzies]

direct interest in the area coupled with their general feeling that we stand for liberalism in the Commonwealth and elsewhere, might make it necessary for us to do a little explaining. It occurs to me that if we were also to recognize Communist China, either beforehand or not long afterward, it would make our position easier vis-à-vis India.

As the departmental memorandum of May 5 points out, there is a difference of view on the political measures required in Indo-China. The problems involved have been discussed in the memorandum and in my despatch No. 246 of June 22,† and I will say little more on this point here. I would add, however, that my present feeling is that it is important that France should now go as far as she possibly can in granting effective sovereignty to the associated states and in assisting Bao Dai's Government to assert itself with real authority. Further, if complete independence cannot be granted now, surely France could hold out some real hope of this happening once victory had been achieved. On the other hand, it is equally important to keep in mind the basic nature of the struggle in Indo-China. Victory for Ho Chiminh would bring communism to the country, and even proposed solutions based on the possibility of compromise should, I think, be viewed with considerable reserve at this stage. At the moment it looks as though the only effective way to save Indo-China from communism is to support Bao Dai in one way or another. I would certainly welcome any steps the Canadian Government might feel it could take to provide material Assistance to his government. As for recognition, it would be unlikely in itself to affect the position in Indo-China materially; but, subject to the considerations I have mentioned, I would certainly not oppose it.

It has occurred to me that the purely legal point of view has perhaps not been sufficiently stressed in the departmental memorandum although it is deserving of consideration. A strictly legal assessment of the question of recognition seems to me to be as follows: if we consider that France has not set up a separate and sufficiently independent state in Indo-China no further question arises; if, however, we agree that France has created a new international entity it would appear to be difficult to separate recognition of that new state from recognition of the government to which France has confided it.

Yours sincerely,

WARWICK CHIPMAN

Memorandum from Under-Secretary of State for External Affairs to Secretary of State for External Affairs

SECRET [Ottawa], July 4, 1950

RECOGNITION OF INDO-CHINESE STATES

You will recall that the possibility was discussed of our recognising the Bao Dai government in Viet Nam and the two other associate states of Cambodia and Laos either before or simultaneously with recognition of Peking. In view of the aggression by North Korean communist forces and the unlikelihood of negotiations with Peking proceeding, you may now wish to propose to the Cabinet the immediate recognition by Canada of the Indo-Chinese states. The French have again been urging us to take this action.

2. The drawing of the lines in the Far East has now imparted some political urgency for Canada to adopt a less equivocal stand on Indo-China. It would seem advisable for us now to make a gesture of support for the Bao Dai administration and the French, even if this means suppressing our scruples as to the legal entity of the states. A move which would align us with the United States and the United Kingdom in this matter and contribute towards a manifestation of the political solidarity of the democracies in the Far East, would probably gain public approval at this time.

3. Our hesitancy in extending recognition has already emphasized to the French our reservations as to the degree of autonomy granted Bao Dai. In order to show that we still maintain these reservations, you might think it best that we should employ a formula of qualified recognition, such as that employed by the United Kingdom. The announcement would be couched in such terms as these:

> "The Canadian Government recognizes the status of Viet Nam as an Associate State within the French Union in accordance with the terms of the Agreement dated March 8, 1949 between President Auriol and His Majesty Bao Dai, and recognizes the Government of His Majesty Bao Dai as the government of that state."

Similar formulae would be applicable to Cambodia and Laos.

4. In case you might wish to discuss the matter of the recognition of Bao Dai in Cabinet, I am attaching for your use a copy of the departmental memorandum (revised as of June 9) giving the arguments for and against recognition of the Indo-Chinese states.[29] With regard to paragraph 15 of the memorandum, it is interesting to note that our High Commissioner in Karachi has been informed that the Pakistani Government would not take amiss Canadian recognition of Bao Dai.

5. If recognition of the Indo-Chinese states is decided upon, it would be necessary to have appropriate notes delivered to the authorities of these states and to the French Government, and to make a suitable announcement to the press.[30]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS; RECOGNITION OF INDO-CHINESE STATES

5. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, referring to the discussion at the meeting of February 23rd, 1950, said that the French Government had been pressing for some time for some kind of recognition for the three associate states of Viet Nam, Cambodia and Laos. If recognition were granted, it should strengthen the position of Bao Dai and make it easier for the French Government to turn over to him a greater measure of authority. Any contribution made to political stability in Indo-China would enable France to decrease her military commitments there and allow her to make a more effective contribution within the North Atlantic alliance. Furthermore, it would also be helpful in contributing to internal stability in France. Recognition had been extended to the three states by a large number of countries, including the United Kingdom and the United States. If we were to follow, our recognition could be couched in the terms of the treaties between the three states and France, that is, would recognize them as associate states within the French union.

Against recognition was the fact that the three states did not meet all the customary legal requirements for recognition. Under the terms of the agreements establishing their independence, France still retained a large measure of control over foreign affairs, defence and finance. Furthermore, Bao Dai's Government was in effective control over only a limited part of the territory in Viet Nam. In addition, the only Asian state so far to grant recognition had been Thailand. India had indicated that it would regret recognition by Canada but it was thought it would understand the reasons motivating it. Finally, there was some possibility that recognition by Canada might increase the chances of France asking for Canadian assistance in Indo-China.

CABINET DOCUMENT NO. 219-50 Ottawa, September 14, 1950

CONFIDENTIAL

PROPOSED TRADE NEGOTIATIONS WITH VENEZUELA, COLOMBIA, ECUADOR, COSTA RICA AND HONDURAS

1. In accordance with previous discussions, arrangements have been made for a small delegation of Canadian officials to visit Venezuela, Colombia, Ecuador, Costa Rica and Honduras for the purpose of improving trade relations with these countries. The primary object of the negotiations in each country should be to obtain for Canadian exports treatment which, though not necessarily identical with that accorded to partners in bilateral trade agreements with these countries, will be equal to that given to the United States.

2. The objective is to arrange modi vivendi with the five countries named as follows:

(a) Venezuela: the text, already agreed upon, is identical with that of the former modus vivendi that lapsed in 1949,[1] and is attached as Appendix 1.†

(b) Ecuador: the modus vivendi has lapsed[2] and the effort should be to renegotiate it in substantially similar terms. The proposed text is attached as Appendix 2.†

[2] Voir ibid., N°. 13./See ibid., No. 13.

(c) Colombia: it is hoped that the trade agreement negotiated in 1941[3] will be ratified in due course by the Colombian Congress. While Canada and Colombia already exchange most-favoured-nation treatment under the terms of a treaty made between Colombia and the United Kingdom in 1866, Colombia gave notice in 1938 of intention to terminate this treaty. If and when Colombia takes this step, it would automatically bring to an end the most-favoured-nation arrangement between Canada and Colombia. For this reason it is proposed that the Canadian delegation should endeavour to negotiate a modus vivendi, (in terms similar to those proposed for Venezuela) which should secure the continuation of most-favoured-nation treatment, by direct agreement between Canada and Colombia, pending ratification of the more formal Trade Agreement negotiated in 1941.

(d) Costa Rica: Under the terms of an exchange of notes made in 1936 between Costa Rica and the United Kingdom,[4] Canada is already entitled to receive most-favoured-nation treatment. Here also it is proposed that the continuation of such treatment should be based upon a direct agreement in similar terms between Costa Rica and Canada.

(e) Honduras: As Canada has not hitherto succeeded in obtaining most-favoured-nation treatment, it is proposed that a further effort should be made to negotiate a modus vivendi of the same pattern.[5]

3. The modi vivendi should be in terms substantially similar to those formerly negotiated with Venezuela and Ecuador, but there should be two slight alterations.

(a) The first alteration is required to provide for the new status of Ireland. It should stipulate that the advantage now accorded, or which may hereafter be accorded by Canada exclusively to the members of the British Commonwealth of Nations, including their dependent territories, and to the Republic of Ireland shall be excepted from the operation of this agreement.

(b) The second proposed alteration would deal with treatment of contiguous countries and possible customs unions. It should provide that the clauses of the agreement will not be applicable to advantages which might be accorded by either country to a contiguous country or to advantages which might result from a customs union in which either country might take part, it being understood that such advantages would not be enjoyed by a third country. This wording was incorporated as Article V of the Venezuelan modus vivendi in 1947 at the request of Venezuela.

According to Canada Yearbook, 1950, Ottawa: King's Printer, 1951, Canada appears to have extended most-favoured nation treatment to Costa Rica under the terms of an exchange of notes with the United Kingdom of March 1-2, 1933 and a Canadian Order-in-Council of July 20, 1935 (P.C. No. 2087).

[5] Les dossiers n'indiquent pas que la délégation a mené des négociations avec le Honduras.
There is no record that the delegation conducted negotiations with Honduras.

4. In addition to the negotiation of a modus vivendi with each country, it is important that the delegation should endeavour to prepare the way for the future conclusion of a more formal and extensive trade agreement similar to that which is in force with Mexico. A copy of the Mexican agreement,[6] with name of country left in blank, is attached as Appendix 3.†

5. The delegation should leave about the end of September 1950; in addition to the necessary stay in the five countries mentioned above, the delegation should have discretion to make brief courtesy calls in Mexico, Guatemala, El Salvador and Nicaragua, with all of which countries Canada now has most favoured-nation agreements.

6. I therefore recommend that

(a) a delegation be authorized to undertake these duties;

(b) the delegation be given powers to negotiate modi vivendi embodying reciprocal most-favoured-nation treatment to run for one year (or longer until terminated) with each of the countries mentioned;

(c) the leader of the delegation be given full powers to sign each modus vivendi, provided that the terms are not less favourable to Canada than those indicated in the attached drafts; any substantial changes would be subject to prior approval by the Government of Canada;

(d) the delegation consist of

Mr. H. Leslie Brown, Dept. of Trade and Commerce (leader of delegation)
Mr. H.R. Kemp, Dept. of Trade and Commerce
Mr. A. Savard, Dept. of Trade and Commerce
Dr. C.A. Annis, Dept. of Finance.[7]

RE PROPOSED TRADE AGREEMENT WITH VENEZUELA

1. As intimated to you in our cable of October 6th,† the conversations concerning the possibility of drafting a trade agreement between Venezuela and Canada, commenced on October 9th. In the previous week, we had submitted to the appropriate officials of the Ministry of External Affairs, a copy of the draft prepared before leaving Canada. They had studied this, and their three main observations may be summarized under A, B and C below:

2. (A) With reference to section 4 of Article I, they made the observation that, even though this article is limited more to products rather than shipping, they desire to preserve freedom of action in the event that it may be found necessary, from their point of view, to give concessions to their own national shipping, including vessels of the Grand Colombian Fleet, which is operated jointly by Venezuela with Colombia and Ecuador. They consider also that they need to retain liberty of action in the event that they wish to discriminate in favour of another country, of which Ecuador would be a good example. All in all, however, it was not anticipated that this section need be the cause of any great difficulty.

3. (B) One of the paragraphs in the Canadian draft trade agreement to which the Venezuelan officials have raised objections is that portion of Article IV, which, following the lines of Article III of GATT, specifies that Canadian goods imported into Venezuela shall not be subject, after their importation, to internal taxes higher than those applicable to similar products of national origin. In Venezuela, as in numerous other countries, it is the practice to extend protection to domestic products by exempting them in whole or in part from the internal taxes which are applied to imports.

4. The Venezuelans desire to maintain this form of protection for certain home industries, (e.g. alcoholic beverages and cigarettes) and think it unlikely that their government would consent to abandon it.

5. While the obvious way of meeting their difficulty might seem to be by increasing the tariff on brandy, cigarettes, etc., to compensate for the removal of discrimination in excise taxes, this course presents difficulties because the Venezuelan customs duty on cigarettes is bound under a trade agreement with the U.S.A. and that on brandy is bound under a trade agreement with France. Consequently, any increase in the Venezuelan tariff on these items, even to compensate for reduction in excise taxes, would necessitate the agreement of these two countries.

6. The general purpose of the proposed Venezuelan trade agreement (from the Canadian point of view) is to confirm and expand most-favoured-nation treatment for Canada rather than to obtain a reduction in the protection which Venezuela may give to domestic liquor, cigarettes, or other commodities. Consequently we might omit from our draft agreement any reference to the equalization of excise taxes on imported and domestic products, so long as we retain most-favoured-nation treatment in this respect.

7. The only objection to such action on the part of Canada would appear to be along the following lines. In negotiating GATT, all the countries concerned (including Canada) thought it desirable to demand from the others, and to give in return, national treatment in respect of internal taxation. (Some countries have not yet carried out this obligation because, so long as their adoption of GATT remains merely provisional, they are not obligated to make changes in their existing legislation.) We in Canada have eliminated discriminatory excise taxes and under most-favoured-nation treaties are obligated to extend the benefits of such action to Venezuela. On the other hand, Venezuela is not obligated to extend such benefits to us. Therefore, we are offering to Venezuela a better bargain than the one which we have offered to our fellow-members of GATT.

8. We do not ourselves regard this as a consideration which should necessarily prevent us from meeting the wishes of the Venezuelans on this point, but have told them only that this is a point on which it would be desirable for us to consult with our colleagues in Ottawa.

9. (C) Finally, in reference to article VIII, it was explained to us that Venezuelan practice in the matter of placing a treaty into effect before it is actually ratified, is to sign a modus vivendi of exactly the same words which will go into effect at once and will operate until the agreement itself is ratified. This procedure certainly has its attractions from the point of view of simplicity.

10. Discussions having reached this point, we then raised the question as to how they might be continued to conclusion, or to a point where conclusion would be a simple matter of arranging for signature. The leading Venezuelan official explained carefully that, many years ago, when Venezuela first attained independence, there was difficulty in obtaining recognition abroad, and, at that time, a rule was set up that the Venezuelan authorities would not discuss international matters except at diplomatic level. In view of the fact that Canada still has no diplomatic mission in Caracas, it is obviously impossible for the Canadian officials, at present posted here, to discuss a trade agreement. We must therefore use the channel of the British Embassy, send a Canadian Minister of State on a special mission, or wait until we have established our own diplomatic mission in this country. However, there is good reason to anticipate that a treaty along the lines of the draft (copy attached)† would be received very favourably, with the exceptions noted, and that approach on a diplomatic level would be welcomed here.

RE MODUS VIVENDI BETWEEN VENEZUELA AND CANADA

I am enclosing herewith a copy of the Venezuelan Gaceta Oficial dated October 11, 1950,† which contains the Spanish version of the modus vivendi just concluded between Venezuela and Canada. Two copies of the English version submitted to the Minister of Foreign Affairs, are also attached.[8]

Negotiations between the Canadian Delegation and the Venezuelan authorities went smoothly, and the only difficulty arose at the outset when the Venezuelans insisted that the Delegation be formally introduced by the British Ambassador. As you know, the Venezuelan Government has continually refused to negotiate on a diplomatic level with a Consulate General, and insists that all approaches should be made through our diplomatic representative in Caracas. However, I am pleased to advise that the British Ambassador cooperated with the official introduction and there was no difficulty thereafter in working towards the conclusion of the modus vivendi.

During the visit of the Mission, numerous sources close to the Government indicated most strongly to us that the Venezuelan Government was very anxious to exchange diplomatic representation as soon as possible. Members of the Canadian Delegation were constantly on the defensive in this regard, and it was clearly pointed out to us that the Venezuelans find it hard to reconcile the fact that we have diplomatic representatives in Peru and Chile and not in this country, in view of the amount of business now being done between Canada and Venezuela. I understand that the Canadian Trade Delegation will be making a full report to you on this subject; as well as to the Department of External Affairs.

STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL. FOR IMMEDIATE ATTENTION.

No trade agreement any kind can be made by Colombian Government's without the approval of the Colombian Congress which will not meet before July 20th 1951. We are officially informed that recent compensation agreement not signed by Government but by the autonomous agencies. In addition no modus vivendi can be signed by Colombia because the short term agreements are contrary to the Colombian Government policies. It has become clear in the course of the discussions that the important provisions of the 1946 agreement are not acceptable to Colombia today. Meanwhile reciprocal most favoured nation treatment between Canada and Colombia continues as it stands at present under the treaty of 1866 with Great Britain. Copy of the agreed statement for immediate release to the Colombian press has gone as separate message in clear.[9]

For your confidential information we are reasonably satisfied with new draft agreement but are still trying [to] reach agreement on the one controversial point. Entire agreement however naturally remain[s] subject to approval of both Governments. Arriving Ecuador October 25th.

Dear Dr. Weeks:

PROPOSED MODUS VIVENDI WITH ECUADOR — PRESS RELEASE

Yesterday we received your letter of October 26,† your file 30810-A, together with your first draft of the Ecuadorean press release as and when it might be required. In this letter we propose dealing only with the press release.

During our negotiations the Ecuadoreans have tried very hard to obtain the inclusion in the prospective modus vivendi of lists of products which each country would undertake to buy in larger quantities from the other. We have of course resisted this proposal and have now obtained the reluctant agreement of the Ecuadorean officials that such lists should not be included in the modus, but in order to give them some consolation we have offered to ask our friends at Ottawa to see that the press release, if one is eventually issued, shall include a list of the goods that the Ecuadoreans would like to sell in Canada, and an expression of hope that the conclusion of this agreement will do something to promote trade in these articles. In this connection we stated to the Ecuadoreans in a letter that:

> "At the same time we have no objection to its being made known to the citizens of Ecuador and of Canada that as a result of our negotiations it is our hope that the trade in certain commodities will benefit. We have in Canada an official publication issued by our Department of Trade & Commerce, and circulated in thousands of copies to business houses all over the country, as well as to the press. If we are successful in arriving at a mutually satisfactory modus vivendi here, we should be glad to arrange for the insertion in this publication of an announcement listing the names of the particular commodities which it is the wish of Ecuador to sell in Canada, and we should at the same time see that this statement is circulated to the entire press in Canada. We should be glad if the Ecuadorean authorities at the same time would be willing to arrange for a similar announcement in Ecuador. It is our hope that by this method the desire of both countries to stimulate trade in commodities of major commercial importance to them can be brought to the knowledge of the public even more effectively than by putting a list in a treaty, and by the method of publicity just suggested there would be no implication that, for example, Ecuador was obligating itself to purchase its wheat from Canada or Canada was obligating itself to purchase its coffee from Ecuador."

In view of this letter it would be necessary to add to the press release, as near the beginning as possible, an expression of our hope that the conclusion of this agreement would lead to the expansion of trade in such Ecuadorean articles as: bananas, pineapples, nafanjillas, and other tropical fruits, cocoa beans, green coffee, vegetable ivory nuts (used in making buttons, etc.), untrimmed panama hats, a wide range of unrefined vegetable oils and oilseed cakes, kapok, balsa wood, shark-liver oil and shark fins, peppers, cocoa butter, untanned furs and skins, handicraft products, rubber.

It would be much appreciated if, in the press release, it could be indicated to the press of Canada that it would be a great help in indicating our goodwill to Ecuador if this list could be included in such part of the release as may be published by any particular newspaper.

The list of Canadian products in lines 25 and 26 of Draft A of your press release might be supplemented by the addition of: canned sardines, steel wire and chains, enamelware, and in addition to writing paper, "certain other forms of paper and paperboard", porcelain insulators, electric meters, rubber footwear and rubber clothing.

In addition to the above articles on which a tariff concession is being made, there are some others in which an increase of trade is hoped for, even though no tariff change is involved. This latter category includes: agricultural and industrial machinery and tools, electrical equipment and accessories, newsprint, wheat flour and pure-bred cattle. In view of the scarcity of some articles for export, you may prefer to omit one or two of the potential Canadian exports listed above, but we feel that we should leave this to your discretion.

The general position of our negotiations with Ecuador is described in a separate letter, from which you will see that it is still uncertain whether you will have an opportunity to use this press release or not.

An extra copy of this letter is enclosed for your convenience.

Yours faithfully,

H. LESLIE BROWN

Quito, November 2, 1950

Dear Dr. Weeks:

NEGOTIATIONS WITH ECUADOR

With reference to your letter of October 26,† your file 30810-A, it seems useful to make reference to some earlier exchanges. In our cable of October 26† we advised you that negotiations had commenced that day, and enquired as to whether your comments on the Ecuadorian draft agreement might contain any urgent information useful in our discussions. We wish to thank you for your cable of October 27 reading:

"RETEL twentysixth full comments also press release similar Venezuela sent yesterday stop Draft Ecuador Treaty Articles one four five six nine unsuitable".

We had already rejected the Articles you enumerated.

At the time we sent our cable of October 26 it appeared that there would be no unusual delay and we had reason to anticipate that the negotiations for a Modus Vivendi might well be concluded by about Monday, October 30. However progress was not as rapid as expected, and on Oct. 30 we sent you a further cable reading:

"No developments in time for publication Foreign Trade this week but hope cable further news before leaving November fourth".

We were not very optimistic, but prospects were not definitely negative. By November 1 the situation had reached the stage where it seemed worthwhile to stay an additional week, and we sent you our cable of November 1st reading:

"Have decided that local prospects justify our staying Quito until November eleven writing stop Please advise our offices and families".

You may find it of interest if we try to summarize in a few paragraphs the course of developments during our visit to Ecuador.

Ecuador is, as you know, a relatively undeveloped country with a population of some three millions, most of whom are engaged in agriculture, and have a low standard of living. They consider that their export industry in most need of help is bananas. They export coffee, cocoa, and rice, but they told us that they have no difficulty in disposing of exportable surplus. They also have small exports of panama hats, vegetable ivory, balsa wood, and a few other items, but they have emphasized to us throughout that their one important export article is bananas and that their major interest in the trade agreement would be the question as to what it might do for their export industry in bananas. Like most other Latin American countries they have their balance of payments difficulties, and must reserve the right to restrict imports to conserve foreign exchange. They are receiving a good deal of help from the United States of the P.F.[10] character, and it is perhaps not surprising that they have chosen in the past to give exceptionally favourable treatment to the United States.

In the original Ecuadorean draft modus vivendi which as you remember had been promised for months but was not delivered until the end of September, they wished to make it an affair of lists of commodities, free trade in bananas, bi-lateral balancing of payments, etc. They do not have any m.f.n. treaties at the present time, so far as we can learn, except one with Chile, and m.f.n. agreements are not a part of their present trade philosophy. We found that the officials with whom we have held discussions, and their Ministers, so far as they had given thought to the matter, were inclined to believe that Ecuador had nothing to lose by refraining from making a m.f.n. agreement with Canada, and nothing to gain by making one. Even in our most recent meeting held on Nov. 1st, the Minister of Economic Affairs still expressed the opinion that Canada as a member of GATT was obligated to grant m.f.n. treatment to all countries in the world, whether members of GATT or not, and when we assured him that such was not the case, he said that, at least, there was an agreement among the members of GATT that they would not discriminate against any non-member before 1952, if then. One of the officials in the Ecuadorean Delegation supported him in this statement; we naturally did our best to correct this impression.

These observations will help to explain the state of ignorance and misunderstanding which we have found here, and which has been one of the obstacles to arriving at an agreement. It should be added that these points of view were not immediately disclosed in the first half hour of discussion, but only gradually came to light in the progress of meetings lasting over the first week.

It should also be noted that the officials whom we met, having themselves presumably been responsible for drafting the Articles which are unacceptable to us, naturally felt a certain annoyance at seeing the product of their efforts firmly rejected from the Canadian side, and were not disposed to go back to the type of agreement negotiated in 1941 which they had already denounced on the ground that it was not suited to modern conditions and that it had not worked to the benefit of Ecuador.

At the close of the first week, the Canadian delegation, feeling that not much progress had been made, decided that it would be appropriate to prepare a general statement of the advantages to be obtained by both countries under a new m.f.n. agreement, this statement to be used in the next negotiating meeting (Oct. 30) and if necessary in the form of a letter to the Minister of External Affairs. This statement was prepared and delivered at the meeting, with apparent good effect, except on our principal opponent, who unfortunately happened to be absent on account of illness and consequently did not get the benefit of the reasoned statement presented at the time — nor is it certain that he has since read it.

The Ecuadorean officials consented to the deletion of the list of products which they had originally incorporated as Article I of their draft, but as to the banana question they said that they had definite instructions from their Government and could not themselves consent to any alteration in their proposal. They requested the Canadians to prepare a copy of their statement in the form of a letter to the Minister of External Affairs. (This had already been done and the letter was delivered that same afternoon, Oct. 30.)

At the next negotiating meeting on November 1, the Minister of Economic Affairs took the chair and we were surprised and disappointed to find that although he had been brought in to deal with the position that had been reached in previous discussions, he definitely had not been informed of the course of affairs to date, nor had he read the letter in which the whole situation had been recapitulated by the Canadians. In fact he did not even know the mechanics whereby a modus vivendi might be arranged instead of a formal treaty. It became clear during this meeting that the five Ecuadorean officials who had been negotiating up to the present time were neither vested with authority themselves nor had they cleared the questions at issue with their respective Ministers, and they gave us no support in respect of any of the matters on which agreement had been reached between the two groups in previous meetings. After some discussion the Minister of Economic Affairs began to suggest reasons for postponing further action. In view of the fact that the last three days of the present week (Nov. 2, 3 and 4) are official holidays, the President and a number of the Ministers are spending a few days out of town, and for a part of the period the Civil Service will not be in their offices. It would therefore be impossible to consult with the Ministers, this week, as would be necessary under Ecuadorean practice, before signing a modus vivendi. Moreover, these are the closing days of the session of the Ecuadorean Congress, and there are many matters arising at such a time which require the urgent attention of the Ministers. In view of this situation the Minister suggested that the Canadian Delegation should sign the Modus Vivendi and leave it behind to be considered by the Ecuadorean Ministers at some future date and signed by them if and when they agreed to it.

Having regard to the many months that it took to obtain from the Ecuadoreans even a draft agreement for consideration, the Canadian group suspected that if they were to depart from Ecuador at this time leaving matters in the condition suggested by the Minister of Economic Affairs, it might be many a long day before any further progress occurred. During such a waiting period it would be difficult for Canada to continue extending m.f.n. treatment to Ecuador and embarrassing to withdraw it. The whole negotiation appeared to be in a state of flux. There was at least the possibility that by remaining here a little longer the Delegation might be able to exert enough pressure by direct and indirect means to bring about the signing of an agreement before its departure. On the other hand if the Delegation departed at this time it might mean postponement of any action for many months, if not complete loss of the effort thus far made. It was therefore decided with considerable reluctance to remain for an additional week, during which time it is planned to press for further meetings with the negotiating group, the Ministers concerned, and the President, and to do whatever else might appear to help prospects of affecting the decision of the people concerned regarding a modus vivendi. Any spare time could be used to discuss the prospective trade agreement. The Ecuadorean officials expressed their willingness to spend some time during the coming week in discussing a possible future commercial agreement expanding the modus vivendi.

In the meantime we have more or less agreed with the Ecuadorean officials on a new draft modus vivendi, translation of which is enclosed in triplicate.† As above indicated, you will appreciate that this is not regarded by the Ecuadoreans as more than a draft which may or may not be accepted by the Ministers concerned, nor are they themselves enthusiastic about it. From our own point of view we think that, as compared with their earlier efforts, the new draft is comparatively innocuous. There is only one point remaining in it that has given us a little concern, and that is, the omission of any provision under which we would enjoy m.f.n. treatment with regard to internal taxation of articles already imported, as contrasted with m.f.n. treatment in connection with customs duties imposed at the time of importation. This was however a point upon which they declared that they were unable to meet our wishes, although it might be considered in a trade agreement. We do not however believe that it is their intention to impose any discriminatory internal taxes upon our products and if they do, the new draft still provides that we would be entitled to make representations on the subject, and if these representations do not result in a satisfactory solution we should then be entitled to denounce the Modus Vivendi on short notice.

As an indication of the vacillating attitudes we have encountered, the following incident may be mentioned. At the luncheon party which we gave for the members of the Ecuadorean negotiating group on Tuesday, October 31, Dr. Veintemilla,[11] the leader, expressed the view that although there was still much to discuss between us, he felt confident that a mutually satisfactory arrangement could be arrived at. At the meeting held the following day, November 1, however, at which the Minister of Economic Affairs presided, the temperature appeared to have changed completely. The subjects brought up for discussion were only those on which we thought that agreement had already been reached, and there was no longer any indication that finalization of an agreement was practically a foregone conclusion.

Our position in trying to obtain signature of the proposed Modus Vivendi here would have been greatly strengthened if we had been in a position to assure the Ecuadoreans that they would receive a concession on bananas, or that they could count on a supply of newsprint from Canada. Naturally we were not able to give them any assurances on either of these matters, but if you could tell us anything useful from Torquay about bananas which we could pass on to them we should appreciate your advice by cable.[12] The subject of bananas will likely come up again in Costa Rica and Honduras. The fact is that, in Ecuador, the negotiators made quite clear that they wished to obtain a tariff concession from Canada on bananas which, even though accorded to other nations (and therefore perhaps valueless to Ecuador), they thought would have a good psychological effect in this country.

We are sending this letter and the enclosure in triplicate, so that you may forward a copy to the Department of External Affairs and one to the Department of Finance.

Le directeur par intérim de la Direction des Relations internationales du commerce du ministère du Commerce au chef de la délégation du commerce

Acting Director, International Trade Relations Division, Department of Trade and Commerce to Head of Trade Delegation

[Ottawa], November 13, 1950

Dear Mr. Brown,

This is to give you a full report on developments at this end, with reference to your two letters of November 2, and our exchange of cables of November 7,† 8,† 9† and 10.†

Your letters of November 2 were read with great interest and explained the serious difficulties you encountered in Ecuador.

Your proposals to include a list of Ecuadorean products in the press release, as a concession to Ecuador, were discussed with the Deputy and with Fergus Grant, and it was agreed to add a final sentence to the first part of the press release (the Minister's statement), mentioning the products available for sale to Canada. The full text of this release, plus a background article on Ecuador and a list of tariff reductions, were all set up for last week's Foreign Trade, but had to be withdrawn by Thursday morning, in the absence of a definite assurance that the modus would be signed.

The draft of the modus was examined in detail by this Division.

The advisability of including Article IV was seriously questioned. We felt this would establish a precedent which might set off a chain-reaction with other countries, might lead to question under GATT, and could open the way to Ecuador asking for such measures consistent with our laws as the opening of a resident Trade Commissioner's office, special campaigns for the sale of Ecuadorean products, trade missions and trade fairs, and even government bulk contracts. Our first reaction was to leave this clause out altogether as a matter of principle. External and Finance agreed fully with our points; John Deutsch was quite definite as to our putting Ecuador back on the General Tariff. We therefore cabled you accordingly, and hoped the realization by the Ecuadoreans that they were in fact benefiting greatly by m.f.n. treatment would lead to a satisfactory solution.

The next day, we received your cable of November 8 with news of the Ecuadorean reaction. We immediately set about studying all possible alternatives and the various consequences that could ensue. This was our reasoning:

Ecuador's insistence on this clause appeared to mean they themselves might expect this modus to be more than a mere exchange of m.f.n. As a matter of principle, the precedent of including a clause of this type was dangerous. The commitment to use "all means" had the implications described above. The relatively small importance of this market argued against creating such a precedent in this particular case. The U.S. Treaty with Ecuador contains no such clause.

We then reviewed the possible consequences of a failure of Ecuador.

For Canada, the 30 percent tariff disadvantage would apply in particular to canned salmon and sardines, sewing machines, tires, radio sets, clocks and wrapping paper. However, the bulk of our exports, especially: wheat flour, newsprint and agricultural machinery, would not suffer from this. The supply position of some of the affected items over the next year was not such as to cause us concern. From this point of view, therefore, we would not have too much to lose.

But, apart from the tariff question, the 50 percent surtax on the statute books of Ecuador had to be considered. The result of a General Tariff on Ecuadorean imports into Canada would be to widen still further Ecuador's trade deficit with us. Thus, the imposition of a 50 percent surtax was a strong probability.

Such a surtax would virtually eliminate Ecuador as a market for Canada. A number of firms, in particular, the flour milling and rubber tire industries, would be affected. We had already heard from some of these firms, expressing great interest in the Ecuador market.

The psychological effect of a 50 percent surtax being the only result of a lengthy visit to Ecuador by the Delegation would also have to be considered.

For Ecuador, the results of a failure appeared to be just as serious. The General Tariff would definitely be imposed and the rates on bananas, coffee, cocoa beans and panama hats would rise to about double, thus affecting approximately 80 percent of Ecuador's exports. The granting of m.f.n. treatment to Honduras would harm still further Ecuador's competitive position in bananas. Ecuador would lose all chances of the GATT reductions being extended to her.

We felt that a few months' experience of the General Tariff would lead to Ecuador realizing their mistake of insisting on a prestige matter to the detriment of concrete advantages.

These various points were discussed fully with the Deputy, with Finance and External.

In view of Ecuador's insistence on conciliating local opinion, and of the possible repercussions of not concluding the agreement, we finally decided reluctantly to accept Article IV, but only on condition that no opening was left for further demands. This could best and most easily be done by inserting the word "appropriate", which would leave entirely up to each party the question of what measures, if any, to take under their respective laws and obligations in order to stimulate trade.

This, we hoped, would satisfy Ecuador's desire, without committing us to anything other than m.f.n. treatment pure and simple.[13]

On receipt of your final cable, the press release was mimeographed for issue that same afternoon.[14]

We shall be sending you copy of a similar draft release for Costa Rica† by separate mail, and wish you the best of luck.

Yours faithfully,
E.P. WEEKS

Dear Dr. Weeks:

PROJECTED MODUS VIVENDI WITH COSTA RICA

We arrived here on Sunday, Nov. 12, midday, and after discussion among ourselves, concerted with Mr. Depocas,[15] and taking into account what we gathered of the position here, we decided to prepare a new draft modus vivendi based on the drafts of modus vivendi and of trade agreement sent to you from Caracas, which in turn were based on the present Mexican agreement and the former modus vivendi with Venezuela. I enclose three copies of this composite document.† For your ease of reference it is made up as follows:

Article	I	- Article	I	of draft trade agreement.
"	II	- "	II	of draft modus vivendi.
"	III	- "	III	of draft modus vivendi.
"	IV	- "	IV	of draft modus vivendi.
"	V	- "	IV	of draft trade agreement.
"	VI	- "	V,	Paragraph 4, of draft trade agreement. (Word for word from GATT)

J.C. Depocas, Trade Commissioner resident in Guatemala City, responsible for Guatemala, Costa Rica, El Salvador, Honduras and Nicaragua.

" VII - " V, Paragraphs 1, 2 and 3, draft trade agreement.
" VIII - " VI of draft modus vivendi.

On Sunday we invited the three Costa Rican officials who met us at the airport (at least two of whom are on the Costa Rican delegation) to have lunch with us on Monday. The luncheon went very well indeed, and we placed in the hands of the Costa Ricans four copies in Spanish of the new draft, "tailor-made" for Costa Rica.

This morning we had a meeting lasting approximately one and a half hours with the Costa Rican Minister of Finance & Commerce, together with his two officials who had met us, and the chief legal advisor of his Department. It was clear that our draft had met with their approval in principle, and there seemed little objection to the draft, with the possible exception that they may wish to re-draft Article VI. It is not likely though not impossible, that they may wish to do something to Article IV. There was some discussion of the theoretical possibility that they might wish to give conditional m.f.n. treatment in the form of a special tariff on one or several specific commodities, but this was purely theoretical and the Minister himself indicated that this would not be likely to occur under the present Government. All in all we feel that we can send you this draft as a reasonably close indication of what may ultimately be agreed upon.

The Minister is inclined to place the projected modus vivendi before Congress, which is at present sitting, or at least before a Committee of Congress, as it is his view that Congress would like to have an opportunity of examining the draft even though it is also his view that Congress is hardly likely to raise any objection. It has not yet been decided what procedure will be adopted, but in any event in the next 24 hours he plans to discuss the draft for the second time with the President of Costa Rica and to discuss it also with the Minister of Foreign Relations. We are to be advised perhaps tomorrow, Wednesday, of any final decision, although the decision may not be final for a day or two in the sense that Costa Rica may request a few minor changes.

We shall of course cable you as soon as there is anything definite. Meanwhile we hope that you will have this letter in your hands by Friday morning.

Perhaps events are moving too quickly for you to have sent on a draft press release, or perhaps it will arrive by Friday. In any event unless something extraordinary occurs, it would appear that the standard form of press release will serve the purpose without any embroidery such as was requested by the last country we visited.

Yours faithfully,
H. LESLIE BROWN

San Jose, November 19, 1950

Dear Dr. Weeks:

MODUS VIVENDI WITH COSTA RICA

Following our letter of November 14, negotiations with Costa Rica proceeded smoothly and rapidly, and on November 17th we sent you a cablegram† en clair detailing the various Articles adopted from the drafts prepared in Caracas. Early on the morning of Nov. 18th we received the cable of Nov. 17th† from the Department of External Affairs and were able to clear with the Costa Rican Minister of Finance that there would be no publicity until 9 p.m. on the evening of Monday, Nov. 20th.

Dealing with this point only, it subsequently turned out that a newspaper man stole copies of the modus vivendi from the office of one of the negotiators. The Minister of Finance himself recovered one copy from one newspaper man, but La Prensa Libre although approached personally by the negotiator concerned, refused to cooperate by withholding publication. That newspaper published most of the text on Saturday evening. The Sunday morning papers withheld publication and merely noted that an agreement had been signed. We do not yet know whether the San Jose leakage on Saturday was actually conveyed to Canada.

In our cablegram en clair of Nov. 18th† we explained the procedure followed in Costa Rica whereby such agreements require formal approval of the Costa Rican Legislative Assembly. In our coded cablegram of Nov. 18th† we gave further information and background.

In addition to the information cabled to you, we have subsequently learned from conversation with Mr. F. Cunningham, the local U.S.A. Commercial Attaché, that when Costa Rica got into exchange difficulties, it adopted certain exchange controls which were inconsistent with its agreement with the United States. This was the reason why the U.S.A. temporarily suspended the commercial agreement in April, 1950, so as to free the Costa Rican Government to take the measures which appeared to be necessary. This temporary suspension, in the opinion of Mr. Cunningham, is unlikely to continue beyond April 1, 1951, but it is expected that Costa Rica will find it necessary to continue the exchange restrictions at least until next September. This means that between April and September the Costa Rican authorities will again be acting in breach of their agreement with the United States. While Mr. Cunningham himself feels that a new agreement with Costa Rica would be in order, and that this agreement should give Costa Rica somewhat more latitude then the old one did, he does not yet know what would be the official attitude of Washington in this connection. The Costa Rican authorities are aware of Cunningham's view, but he should of course not be quoted. Mr. Cunningham also remarked that more than 2/3 of the imports into Costa Rica come from the United States, and he felt that they were unduly concentrating their purchases in that quarter. For this reason he would himself be glad to see a larger proportion of the total originating in Canada. He feels that this country has to make use of the tariff as a source of revenue, that it may also fairly ask to be allowed to use protective devices for certain industries, and for these reasons he personally would like to see a new U.S.A. agreement with Costa Rica drawn in terms that would be more to the advantage of Costa Rica.

He added that although Costa Rica produces very fine coffee, he has been somewhat surprised to realize that agricultural development is progressing in the direction of more bananas and less coffee. Costa Rica could, however, greatly increase its production by the adoption of more up-to-date methods of agriculture, especially the use of fertilizer.

Mr. Cunningham's views tend to parallel those of the Costa Rican authorities in that the Minister of Finance has informed us that Costa Rica is bringing out a new tariff, which they hope to have in effect by about the end of 1951, which they wish to make a one-column tariff and which will incorporate the present exchange surcharges in the form of higher duties on those goods considered less essential, as well as higher duties for protective purposes.

This letter is going forward in triplicate and enclosed are three copies of the English text† — the copies have been certified — so that you may forward a copy of the letter and of the text to the Department of External Affairs and to the Department of Finance. Also enclosed is our translation of the opening and closing paragraphs† of the reply received from the Costa Rican Minister of Foreign Relations.

On examining the text in detail, you will note at the beginning of Article VII a provision that in case the Government of either country ceases to extend most-favoured-nation treatment to a third country through which goods move in transit between Canada and Costa Rica, the consultation procedure may be adopted. This sentence was put in at the request of the Costa Ricans, who pointed out that a substantial proportion of Costa Rican exports to Canada passes through the United States. If the United States should cease to enjoy m.f.n. treatment in Canada, this would automatically deprive the Costa Rican products in question of the privileges contemplated. For this reason they wish to have the United States explicitly mentioned as one of the countries through which goods might be shipped to enjoy m.f.n. treatment. We pointed out that the withdrawal of m.f.n. privileges from the U.S.A. was a most unlikely occurrence, one which not take place without ample notice and one which would automatically bring the consultation procedure into effect without explicit mention. In view of their strong desire to be protected on this point, however, we devised the sentence in question in such a way as not to mention the United States specifically, while at the same time protecting both parties against the small risk that has been mentioned.[16]

Yours faithfully,

H. LESLIE BROWN
